2. He suggests the strongest reasons to excite their liberality. (1.) It would be highly for their own advantage. He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully. (2.) God loveth a cheerful giver, and his love is the greatest of blessings. (3.) He is able abundantly to recompense you, both in spiritual graces, and worldly goods; so that you shall still have an abundant sufficiency through his good providence, and be enabled to abound in every good work, finding yourselves never the poorer for what is spent in his blessed service. (4.) They would hereby secure lasting honour, since the Scripture testifies of him who liberally dispenses to the poor, that his righteousness, or alms, remaineth for ever, and shall bring forth the most blessed fruits in everlasting life, when the great Judge in the day of his appearing shall remember and reward him. (5.) Much glory will hereby accrue to God, as well as much good be done to the poor saints, who, experiencing the riches of your bounty, will be excited to offer their thanksgivings to God for this proof of your fraternal love and of your real subjection to the gospel of Christ, manifested in such liberality shown to them, and unto all men as occasion requireth. Note, Where true Christianity is enthroned in the heart, it will ever appear in godlike charity. (6.) This will also engage the prayers of those who partake of your bounty; and an interest in the supplications of the saints at a throne of grace, will abundantly repay us for every kindness done to them. Note, When we can make no other acknowledgment, we must pray for our kind benefactors, that God, the poor man's friend, may reward them.

3. The apostle offers up his own earnest prayers for them. Now he that ministereth seed to the sower, so that there is corn enough for the year's provision, and a sufficiency again to sow the ground, both minister bread for your food, and give you always a supply; and multiply your seed sown, restoring it a hundred-fold into your bosoms; and increase the fruits of your righteousness, enabling you to abound in liberality more and more, as I have confidence he will; being enriched in every thing, with all the blessings of grace and providence, which can enable and dispose you to exercise all bountifulness, which causeth through us thanksgiving to God, who bless his name both for the abundance he hath bestowed upon you, and for the heart he hath given you to employ it to his glory.

4. He concludes with this doxology, Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift; for all he hath done for you, in you, and by you; above all, for Jesus Christ, that most transcendently invaluable gift, which comprehends all others, and for which all language is insufficient to express our gratitude.

CHAP. X.—ANNO DOMINI, 60.

In this chapter the apostle, in a mild and humble manner, asserteth his authority, ver. 1—6. He then proceeds to reason the case with the Corinthians, and refuseth to justify himself, or to act by such rules as the false teachers did, but according to the better rules he had fixed for himself, ver. 7. to the end.

1 NOW I [a] Paul myself beseech you [a] by the meekness and gentleness of Christ, who * [b] in presence am base among you, but being absent am bold toward you: 2. But I beseech you, that [c] I may not be bold when I am present with that confidence wherewith I think to be bold against some, which † think of us as if we walked according to the flesh. 3. For [d] though we walk in the flesh, we do not war after the flesh: 4. [e] (For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds;) 5. [f] Casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the [g] obedience of Christ; 6. [h] And having in a readiness to revenge all disobedience, when [i] your obedience is fulfilled.

Verses 1—6. No where had the apostle met with more malignant insinuations, than from the false teachers at Corinth; he is obliged therefore, in justice to himself, to refute their slanders.

1. Though he had it in his power to punish, he rather chose mildly to entreat, imitating the meekness and gentleness of his blessed Master. The false teachers reviled him as a poor despicable animal, and mean in his abilities, as diminutive in his stature, who fawned and cringed when present, but when absent wrote in such a magisterial style; terrifying them into compliance with his will, by vain boasts of his apostolic rod. But he wished not to be compelled to exercise his power wherewith he was invested, and to their faces boldly to rebuke, and severely chastise, those who dared insinuate as if he walked after the flesh, with views of secular advantage, and influenced by carnal policy. Note, (1.) However great provocations we may meet with, the example of the meek and gentle Lamb of God should ever be in our eye. (2.) If men will not be reformed, they must be ruined. (3.) The best of men and ministers may expect malignant traducers.

2. He asserts the integrity of his preaching and conduct. For though we walk in the flesh, surrounded with the common infirmities of humanity, we do not war after the flesh, under the maxims of fleshly wisdom, or for any selfish ends. For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal; we war not against the powers of evil with an arm of flesh, or pretend to convince by mere human persuasion; but that gospel we preach becomes effectual through divine operation, and is mighty through God, the Spirit's energy, to the pulling down of the strong holds of sin and Satan in this world, and in the hearts of men; casting down imaginations, confuting the corrupt reasonings of self-righteous rabbins and proud philosophers; and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, confounding the pride and self-sufficiency of the unhumbled heart; and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ; engaging the sinner to bow to his gentle yoke; submitting his reason to revelation, his will to the commands of Jesus, and in every sentiment of his soul yielding a willing subjection to the authority of the great Redeemer. Note, (1.) Men are not to be persuaded by the sword, but by the gospel. (2.) Satan's power is strong in the human heart; nothing but the power of Jesus can dethrone him. (3.) Nothing is more opposite to the knowledge of God, than a high conceit of our own wisdom and righteousness.

3. He threatens the offenders, having a readiness to revenge all disobedience, and inflict condign punishment on these false teachers, and maligners of the true apostles; when your obedience is fulfilled, and milder methods have recovered the penitent members from those who continue refractory.

7 [k] Do ye look on things after the outward appearance? [l] If any man trust to himself that he is Christ's, let him of himself think this again, that, as he is Christ's, even so are we Christ's. 8. For [m] though I should boast somewhat more of our authority, (which the Lord hath given us for edification, and not for your destruction,) I should not be ashamed: 9. That I may not seem [n] as if I would terrify you by letters. 10. For his letters, say they, are weighty and powerful; but [o] his bodily presence is weak, and his speech contemptible. 11. Let such an one think this, that such as we are in word by letters [p] when we are absent, such will we be also in deed when we are present. 12. For [q] we dare not make ourselves of the number, or compare ourselves with some that commend themselves: but they, measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves amongst themselves, ‡ are not wise. 13. But [r] we will not boast of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the ‖ rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you. 14. [s] For we stretch not ourselves beyond our measure, as though we reached not unto you: for we are come as far as to you also in preaching the [t] gospel of Christ: 15. [u] Not boasting of things without our measure, that is, of other men's labours; but having hope, when your faith is increased, that we shall be * enlarged by you according to our rule abundantly, 16. Verses 7—18. The apostle reasons the case with the Corinthians. Do ye look on things after the outward appearance? and form your judgment merely on external show? If any man trust to himself that he is Christ's, that he belongs to him as a member of his body mystical, or is commissioned by him as a minister; let him of himself think this again, that as he is Christ's, even so are we Christ's; whatever evidence he may produce of the one or the other, I can at least equal him. For though I should boast somewhat more of our authority, than I have done, or than the vainest of my traducers dare to do concerning the powers with which they are invested (which authority the Lord hath given us for edification of his church, and not for your destruction, to drive offenders to despair by severity,) I should not be ashamed, but dare speak with truth and confidence. But I forbear, that I may not seem as these men suggest, as if I would terrify you by letters. For his letters, say they, are weighty and powerful: wrote in an authoritative strain, and big with menaces: but his bodily presence is weak, and his speech is contemptible; he appears with no dignity of presence and aspect, and his parts and elocution are as despicable as his stature. In answer to such a contemptuous insult, I reply,

1. Let such a one think this, and be assured, that such as we are in word by letters, when we are absent, such will we be also in deed when we are present, and execute every threatening we denounce against the obstinately impenitent.

2. We never act with falsehood and ostentation, like these seducers; For we dare not make ourselves of the number, or compare ourselves with some that commend themselves, puffed up with vain conceit, and blinded with self-admiration: but whilst they fondly value themselves on their imaginary greatness, measuring themselves by themselves, and supposing themselves the standard of excellence, and comparing themselves among themselves, by the poor and insignificant endowments of others equally vain, they are not wise, foolishly fancying they are something, when in fact they are nothing. Note, All self-applause is hateful. We should look to others' superior excellences to be humble, and not proudly vaunt ourselves over those beneath us.

3. The apostle lays down the proper rule of conduct. But we will not boast of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you: like those who run in the Isthmian games, we have kept the line marked out for our race, and in a regular course have preached the gospel as far as Corinth. For we stretch not ourselves beyond our measure, as these false apostles do, as though we reached not unto you, and had in coming to Corinth entered into another man's province; for we are come as far as to you also in preaching the gospel of Christ, through countries where his name had not been heard before: not boasting of things without our measure, that is, of other men's labours, and taking to myself the credit of their success; but having hope when your faith is increased, your church affairs regulated, and your divisions healed, that we shall be enlarged by you according to our rule abundantly, to preach the gospel in the regions beyond you, where darkness still reigns uncontrolled; and not to boast in another man's line of things, made ready to our hand, assuming to myself the honour of their labours. But he that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord, ascribing to the grace of God alone the whole of whatever gifts he enjoys, or success he may be blessed with, and taking no praise to himself; for not he that commendeth himself is approved, but whom the Lord commendeth, and his approbation is the only true and substantial honour.

CHAP. XI.—ANNO DOMINI, 60.

In this chapter the apostle apologizeth for his going about to commend himself, and giveth the reason for what he did, ver. 1—4. Afterwards he mentioneth, in his own necessary vindication, his equality with the other apostles, and with the false apostles in this particular, of preaching the gospel to the Corinthians freely without wages, ver. 5—15. Then he maketh another preface to what he was about further to say in his own justification, ver. 16—21. And afterwards giveth a large account of his qualifications, labours, and sufferings, in which he exceeded the false apostles, ver. 22. to the end.

1. WOULD to God ye could [a] bear with me a little in my folly; and indeed * bear with me. 2. For I am [b] jealous over you with godly jealousy: for I have [c] espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ. 3. But I [d] fear, lest by any means, [e] as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtilty, [f] so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ. 4. For if he that cometh preacheth [g] another Jesus, whom we have not preached, or if ye receive another spirit, which ye have not received, or another gospel, which ye have not accepted, ye might well bear with him.

Verses 1—4. The apostle begins;

1. With an apology for what he was about to say. Would to God ye could bear with me a little in my folly; and indeed bear with me, compelled reluctantly to speak in my own commendation.

2. He gives the reasons for what he was about to say. It was,

(1.) Out of jealousy for them. For I am jealous over you with godly jealousy, for I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ, true to your solemn engagements, and faithful in all your conduct to this heavenly bridegroom of souls. But I fear, knowing the wiles of the false teachers, lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtilty, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ; perverted from the principles, or seduced from the practice of the gospel.

(2.) Out of justice to himself. For if he that cometh preacheth another Jesus whom we have not preached, or if ye receive another spirit, which ye have not received, or another gospel, which ye have not accepted, ye might well bear with him; but since there is but one Jesus, one Spirit, one gospel, it was shrewdly to be suspected, that the person who pretended to preach another Jesus, boasted of a better spirit, and a more excellent gospel than that by which they had at first been converted to the faith, was a deceiver, and, instead of being connived at or caressed, should be rejected with abhorrence.

5. For I suppose I [h] was not a whit behind the very chiefest apostles. 6. But though [i] I be rude in speech, yet not in knowledge; but we have been thoroughly made manifest among you in all things. 7. Have I committed an offence [k] in abasing myself that ye might be exalted, because I have preached to you the gospel of God freely? 8. [l] I robbed other churches, taking wages of them, to do you service. 9. And when I was present with you, and wanted, I was chargeable to no man: for that which was lacking to me the brethren which came from Macedonia supplied: and in all things I have kept myself from being burdensome unto you, and so will I keep myself. 10. [m] As the truth of Christ is in me, [n] no man shall stop me of this boasting in the regions of Achaia. 11. Wherefore? [o] because I love you not? [p] God knoweth. 12. But what I do, that I will do, [q] that I may cut off occasion from them which desire occasion; that, wherein they glory, they may be found even as we. 13. For such are [r] false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ. 14. And no marvel; for [s] Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light. 15. Therefore it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of righteousness; [t] whose end shall be according to their works.

Verses 5—15. Constrained by the insinuations which had been cast out against him, the blessed Paul,

1. Asserts his equality with the very chief of the apostles. Though rude in speech, my style simple, my elocution not so graceful as some others, yet my knowledge of the gospel mysteries is inferior to none. But we have been thoroughly made manifest among you in all things; your consciences have borne witness to the efficacy of our preaching; and our conversation among you, as you know, hath been most unblameable.

2. He asserts his disinterested conduct, and vindicates himself from the cavils of his adversaries, who suggested, as though he acted below the apostolic character, in not receiving his maintenance from the church at Corinth. Have I committed an offence in abasing myself, to work for my subsistence, that ye might be exalted to the participation of the gospel privileges, because I preached the gospel to you freely, that no prejudices might obstruct your receiving our word, which such disinterested zeal could not but recommend? I robbed other churches, taking wages of them to do you service; not really plundering them, but living upon their voluntary contributions, when the Corinthians, so much richer, should have rather afforded him a maintenance. However, he neither had been, nor would be, a burden to them; his former wants the Macedonians supplied, and he was firmly resolved, that none in all Achaia, in any future time, should have reason to reproach him on this behalf, or stop his glorying of having preached to them the gospel freely.

Wherefore do I this? out of pride or disgust, as the false teachers would insinuate, and because I love you not? No; God knoweth these were not my motives. But I have acted and will thus act, that I may cut off occasion from them which desire occasion, and would be ready to catch at any handle to fleece you, if I received any thing from you. Therefore I would wish, that wherein they glory, they may be found even as me, and as free from every mercenary view: for in truth such are false apostles, assuming a character to which they have not the least title; deceitful workers, corrupting the word of God; transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ, appearing under the most specious professions. And no marvel; for Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light, as he appeared when he came to seduce Eve from her integrity: therefore it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of righteousness, whose end shall be according to their works, and the issue be their everlasting destruction.

16. I say again, [u] Let no man think me a fool; if otherwise, yet as a fool, † receive me, that I may boast myself a little. 17. That which I speak, [x] I speak it not after the Lord, but as it were [y] foolishly, in the confidence of boasting. 18. [z] Seeing that many glory after the flesh, I will glory also. 19. For ye suffer fools gladly, [a] seeing ye yourselves are wise. 20. For ye suffer, [b] if a man bring you into bondage, if a man devour you, if a man take of you, if a man exalt himself, if a man smite you on the face. 21. I speak as concerning reproach, as though we had been [c] weak: howbeit, wherein soever any is bold (I speak foolishly,) [d] I am bold also. 22. Are they Hebrews? [e] so am I. Are they Israelites? so am I. Are they the seed of Abraham? so am I. 23. Are they ministers of Christ? (I speak as a fool,) [f] I am more; in labours more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft. 24. * Of Arabia Petræa, and of the territory of Damascus.

Verses 16—33. The apostle with reluctance enters upon the subject of his own vindication. I say again, Let no man think me a fool; if otherwise, yet as a fool receive me, that I may boast myself a little, such boasts, in general, being indeed the indications of a vain mind. That which I speak, I speak it not after the Lord, but as it were foolishly in this confidence of boasting; but since I am compelled by the unhappy circumstances in which I stand, and seeing that many glory after the flesh, in their external privileges, I will glory also. For ye suffer fools gladly, and caress the vain boasters among you, seeing ye yourselves are wise. Probably the words are spoken ironically: Wise men indeed ye are, to be dupes to such ostentatious deceivers. For ye suffer if a man bring you into bondage, tyrannizing over your consciences; if a man devour you under the specious pretences of religion; if a man take of you presents and salaries for preaching; if a man exalt himself, and treat you with lordly contempt; if a man smite you on the face, submissive to every insult. I speak as concerning reproach, with which these deceivers have treated you, as though we had been weak, and had no right to exert such authority as they pretend to claim: howbeit whereinsoever any is bold (I speak foolishly) I am bold also, and can produce as long a catalogue of privileges as the chief of these arrogant men.

1. As to external Jewish privileges or descent, Are they Hebrews? so am I, by both my parents, Phil. iii. 5. Are they Israelites? the sons of Jacob, so am I. Are they the seed of Abraham? so am I, a true descendent of this eminent patriarch.

2. As to gospel privileges, Are they ministers of Christ? commissioned by him, (I speak as a fool,) admitting their plea, though false to be true, I am more, having a more extraordinary commission, more eminent endowments, and suffering for the cause more than any of them. In labours, more abundant, in stripes above measure, unmercifully beaten; in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft, exposed to the most imminent dangers, a short enumeration of which will prove what I assert. Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, by the Roman lictors; once was I stoned, and left for dead; thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day I have been in the deep, tossed on the foaming waves, and every moment ready to be swallowed up by them. In journeyings often, in perils of water, in fording rivers, or by land floods; in perils of robbers, in perils by mine own countrymen, who lay in wait for me; in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, from dangerous insurrections; in perils in the wilderness, during my travels; in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren, the most dangerous of all enemies. In weariness and painfulness, under the most fatiguing labours, in watchings oft, my rest being broken; in hunger and thirst, for want of needful refreshments; in fastings often, voluntary, or necessitated by mere want; in cold and nakedness, exposed to the inclemency of the weather, and without sufficient clothing to keep me warm. Besides those things which affect my body, a heavier load of care lies upon my mind, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches, to advance their purity and peace, rectify their disorders, and guard them against seducers. Who is weak, and I am not weak? sympathizing with him in his infirmity of body or mind? who is offended, and I burn not with jealousy for the offence, and zeal to restore him? If I must needs glory, I will glory of the things which concern my infirmities, and rather mention my sufferings and hardships, than my privileges. The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which is blessed for evermore, knoweth that I lie not. In Damascus the governor under Aretas the king kept the city of the Damascenes with a garrison, desirous to apprehend me: and through a window in a basket was I let down by the wall, and escaped his hands, snatched as it were, from inevitable death. Such a glorious course marked indeed the great apostle: such sufferings for righteousness' sake are the highest honour.

CHAP. XII.—ANNO DOMINI, 60.

In this chapter the apostle, first, maketh mention of the favour God had shown him, and the honour done him, and the methods God took to keep him humble; and the use he made of this dispensation, ver. 1—10. Then he addresseth himself to the Corinthians, blaming them for what was faulty among them, and giving a large account of his behaviour, and kind intentions towards them, ver. 11. to the end.

1. IT is not [a] expedient for me doubtless to glory. I will come to [b] visions and revelations of the Lord. 2. [c] I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago, (whether in the body, I cannot tell; or whether out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth;) such an one caught up to the third heaven. 3. And I knew such a man, (whether in the body, or out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth;) 4. How that he was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not † lawful for a man to utter. 5. Of such an one will I glory: [d] yet of myself I will not glory, but in mine infirmities. 6. For [e] though I would desire to glory, I shall not be a fool; for I will say the truth: but now I forbear, lest any man should think of me above that which he seeth me to be, or that he heareth of me. 7. And, lest I should be exalted above measure through the abundance of the revelations, ‡ there was given to me a [f] thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet me, lest I should be exalted above measure. 8. For this thing [g] I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me. 9. And he said unto me, [h] My grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness. [i] Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me. 10. [k] Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in perse-

Verses 1—10. Once more he will speak. Though (ordinarily he confesses) it is not expedient for me doubtless to glory, since others boast of extraordinary manifestations, I will come to visions and revelations of the Lord; one remarkable instance of which I will only mention.

I knew, or I know, a man in Christ, a faithful soul, above fourteen years ago, (whether in the body I cannot tell; or whether out of the body, whether in his spirit only, or in his whole man, I cannot tell: God knoweth;) such a one caught up to the third heaven, where angels dwell, and the most illustrious display of the divine glory is made. And I knew such a man, (whether in the body, or out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth;) how that he was caught up into paradise, the region of the blessed, and heard unspeakable words, which contained such sublimity of ideas, and were delivered in such language, as it is not lawful, or possible, for a man to utter, in his present mortal state of weakness. Of such a one will I glory: yet of myself I will not glory, but in mine infirmities, and in such things as carry evident marks of my own weakness. For though I would desire to glory, I shall not be a fool; for I will say the truth, and appeal to the heart-searching God for what I say: but now I forbear, lest any man should think of me above that which he seeth me to be, or that he heareth of me, supposing me to be more than human, who am a mere worm. And lest I should be exalted above measure through the abundance of the revelations, there was given to me a thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan, to buffet me, lest I should be exalted above measure: what this was, whether some bodily affliction, or outward reproach, or more probably the workings of old corruptions; whatever it was, it was very grievous, yet sent for the most blessed purpose, and served to keep him humble. For this thing I besought the Lord thrice importunately, that it might depart from me. And he said unto me, by an audible voice, or some divine impression on my spirit, My grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness, and shall carry thee victorious through all opposing foes without, and corruptions within. Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me, and be the more transcendently exalted in rescuing me out of all my trials, and carrying me safe through every temptation. Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses, for Christ's sake; not only resigned, but happy, rejoicing in the sufferings I endure; for when I am weak, then am I strong, and rise victorious over every foe, through the power of omnipotent grace. Note, (1.) To be humbled in the midst of high attainments is doubly excellent. (2.) No thorn more grievous to a gracious soul, than the warrings and buffetings of indwelling sin. (3.) Prayer is the great relief under every distress. (4.) Though God doth not always answer us according to our petitions, yet if he gives us strength to stand in our difficulties, we are bound to acknowledge that our prayers are answered. (5.) There is a sufficiency of grace in the Redeemer to carry us safe through every trial, and to make us at last more than conquerors. (6.) The more we see and feel our own weakness, the more firm we stand in the power of God.

11. [m] I am become a fool in glorying; ye have compelled me: for I ought to have been commended of you: for [n] in nothing am I behind the very chiefest apostles, though I be nothing. 12. And [r] I will very gladly spend and be spent for † you; though the more abundantly I love you, the less I be loved. 16. Again, think ye that we [x] excuse ourselves unto you? we speak [y] before God in Christ: but we [z] do all things, dearly beloved, for your edifying. 20. For I fear, lest, when I come, I shall not find you such as I would, [a] and that I shall be found unto you such as ye would not: lest there be debates, envyings, wraths, strifes, backbitings, whisperings, swellings, * tumults: 21. And lest, when I come again, [b] my God will humble me among you, and that I shall bewail many which have sinned already, and have not repented of the uncleanness, and fornication, and lasciviousness, which they have committed.

Verses 11—21. The apostle returns again,

1. To apologize for what might savour of vanity, I am become a fool in glorying, ye have compelled me: for I ought to have been commended of you, who have received such peculiar benefit by my labours; for in nothing am I behind the very chiefest apostles, in my sufferings and labours, though I be nothing, considered in myself; our sufficiency and success is of God. Truly the signs of an apostle were wrought among you in all patience, amidst innumerable provocations and sufferings, in signs, miracles, and wonders of various kinds, and mighty deeds, which speak the arm of omnipotence. For what is it wherein ye were inferior to other churches, in gifts and privileges, except it be that I myself was not burdensome to you? forgive me this wrong, than which never was a more beautiful turn, and a more poignant, though, polite rebuke, if it be considered as spoken ironically; or seriously, it pleads in a most elegant manner his excuse for refusing that reward from them, which might be construed as a mark of disdain. Note, (1.) Where we have received spiritual benefit, it is a debt we owe to our ministers to vindicate their injured characters. (2.) The greatest of men and ministers, when viewing themselves in their true colours, cannot but own, I am nothing.

2. He declares his purpose to show the same disinterested conduct. Behold the third time I am ready to come to you, having the second time been disappointed; and I will not be burdensome to you, but will preach the gospel to you freely; for I seek not yours, but you, your spiritual benefit, not your worldly substance. For I consider myself as your father in Christ, and shall treat you with paternal care, not desiring nor accepting ought at your hands: for, in general, the children ought not to lay up for the parents, but the parents for the children. And all I have shall be willingly laid out for you; for I will very gladly spend and be spent for you, to promote the good of your souls, ready, if need be, to lay down my own life; though I should meet with the most ungrateful returns, and the more abundantly I love you, the less I be loved, and even those who seduce you be preferred before me. Note, (1.) A true minister of Christ never serves for hire, but for love; delighting to feed, not to fleece the flock. (2.) True zeal for Christ and his cause will make his servants nobly prodigal of life, unto their power, and sometimes above their power exerting themselves in his service. (3.) The most ungrateful returns must not stay us from doing good even to the evil and unthankful.

3. He obviates an insinuation which the seducers suggested, that though he took no wages himself, those whom he sent were well paid. Be it so, they will argue, I did not burden you: nevertheless being crafty, I caught you with guile; so invidiously would they misrepresent my conduct. But in answer I appeal to yourselves. Did I make a gain of you by any of them whom I sent unto you? I desired Titus, and with him I sent a brother: did Titus make a gain of you? walked we not in the same spirit? walked we not in the same steps? showing the same disinterested generosity, and following my example in preaching the gospel freely, without any expense to you? Again,

4. Think ye that we excuse ourselves unto you? and want by specious pretences, for sinister ends, to insinuate into your regard, or to get off from visiting you as I promised? We speak before God in Christ, appealing to him for our sincerity: but we do all things, dearly beloved, for your edifying, having this great end ever in view.

5. He declares his jealous fears for them. For I fear, lest when I come I shall not find you such as I would, obedient and orderly; and that I shall be found unto you such as ye would not; obliged, though with reluctance, to exert my apostolic authority; lest there be debates, envyings, wraths, strifes, backbitings, whisperings, swellings, tumults, and all other evil fruits of a proud, contentious, uncharitable spirit. And lest when I come again, my God will humble me among you, and that I shall bewail many which have sinned already, and have not repented of the uncleanness, and fornication, and lasciviousness which they have committed. Note, (1.) The falls of professors are a real grief to their faithful ministers: and every gracious soul cannot but mourn over them. (2.) They who persist in their iniquities must be faithfully rebuked; and, if they do not amend, their obstinate impenitence will inevitably issue in final perdition.

CHAP. XIII.—ANNO DOMINI, 60.

In this chapter the apostle threatens to be severe against obstinate sinners, and assigneth the reason thereof, ver. 1—6. Then he maketh a suitable prayer to God on the behalf of the Corinthians, and the reasons inducing him thereto, ver. 7—10. And concludeth his epistle with a malediction and a benediction, ver. 11—14.

1. THIS is [a] the third time I am coming to you. [b] In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established. 2. [c] I told you before, and foretell you, as if I were present, the second time; * and, being absent, now I write to them which heretofore have sinned, and to all other, that, if I come again, I will not spare: 3. Since ye seek a proof [d] of Christ speaking in me, which to you-ward is not weak, but is mighty in you. 4. For, though [e] he was crucified through weakness, yet he liveth by the power of God. For we also are weak † in him, but we [f] shall live with him by the power of God toward you. 5. [g] Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves; how that [h] Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates? 6. But I trust that [i] ye shall know that we are not reprobates.

* This does not relate to any future time, but to the apostle's last visit to the Corinthians.

† Or with him.

Verses 1—6. Having once and again warned them by his epistle to amend their disorders, with Sosthenes and Timothy, who joined in his admonitions, he is now the third time ready to appear in person. Therefore,

1. He assures them, that if any continued yet refractory and disorderly, notwithstanding these repeated rebukes, he would not spare, but inflict condign punishment on such obstinate offenders. Note, No patience, human or divine, will always bear: there is an approaching end, when wrath to the uttermost will overtake the ungodly.

2. Since they demanded a proof of his apostleship, they should receive it. Since ye seek a proof of Christ speaking in me, as if I threatened what I had no power or authority to execute; when you have had such demonstrations before of that gospel which I preach, and of that authority with which I am invested, which to you-ward is not weak, but is mighty in you, who have experienced the efficacy of my preaching, and begun to smart under the chastening rod, 1 Cor. xi. 30. For though he was crucified through weakness, yet he liveth by the power of God, and hath all power now committed into his hands; for we also are weak in him, and because of our present sufferings, treated by many of you as despicable, and possessed of no authority from him: but we shall live with him by the power of God towards you; and as surely as he lives, shall we prove ourselves clothed with his power to punish offenders: And this would soon be experienced by them, if they did not instantly amend their ways.

3. He urges them to judge themselves, that they might not be judged of the Lord or his ministers. Examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith; bring your hearts to the touchstone of God's revealed will: prove your own selves, by this divine rule: know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, formed in your hearts by his Spirit, except ye be reprobates, and when brought to the test, like false metal, rejected as refuse, and found hypocrites. But I trust that ye shall know that we are not reprobates, but approved and allowed of our Divine Master, and acknowledged by him as faithful in all things.

7. Now [k] I pray to God that ye do no evil; not that we should appear approved, but that ye should do that which is honest, though we be [l] as reprobates. 8. [m] For we can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth. 9. [n] For we are Verses 7—10. The apostle adds his fervent prayer for them. Now I pray to God that ye do no evil, nor incur censure from us, or wrath from God: not that we should appear approved, and by the punishment we inflict, give a demonstration of our apostolic power; but that ye should do that which is honest, and praiseworthy: though we be as reprobates, and having no need to exert our power, should be thought of as insignificant persons, who really had it not. For we can do nothing against the truth, nor dare lift up the rod against such as walk according to the gospel; but our power is to be exercised for the truth, to defend it against heretical teachers, and to recover backsliders by needful correction. For we are glad when we are weak, and ye are strong; and when your exemplary practice renders censure unnecessary, and we appear as if we had no authority to inflict it. And this also we wish, even your perfection, or restoration; that every offence were removed, the church knit together in perfect harmony and union, and every member of it growing up to the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ. Therefore I write these things being absent, lest being present I should use sharpness, according to the power which the Lord hath given me to edification, and not to destruction; desirous rather that all evils among you should be amended, and our reproofs effectual for your reformation, than that we should be constrained to give a proof of our power in executing deserved punishment on the impenitent.

Verses 11—14. The apostle here,

1. Takes his leave of them with affectionate exhortations. Finally, my brethren, farewell: Be perfect; united to each other, walking in the purity of the gospel, and reforming every disorder; be of good comfort; be of one mind; let every dispute be silenced, and the spirit of party subside. Live in peace and love, and the God of love and peace shall be with you, and dwell in the midst of you with his especial presence and blessing. Greet one another with an holy kiss. All the saints salute you, wishing you all prosperity in your souls and bodies, in time and in eternity. Note, (1.) Union in affection and sentiment is the sure mark of the prosperity of the church. (2.) The God of love and peace commands us to be like himself, and that is to be happy.

2. He concludes with his apostolical benediction. The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all; may the grace of a dying Redeemer, which includes all spiritual and eternal blessings, be your portion! may a sense of the Father's love, the spring and source of your redemption, be warm upon your hearts! and may the richest communications from the Holy Ghost, revive, quicken, strengthen, comfort, stablish you ever more and more, till by the mighty operation of this Triune God, your salvation shall be completed in glory everlasting, and your happy service be his never-ending praise! Such is my prayer for you; cease not to join in my supplications for these inestimable benefits; and let every soul among you with faith and fervency say, Amen.

A PRACTICAL COMMENT

UPON THE

EPISTLE OF ST PAUL

TO THE

GALATIANS.

Introduction.

THIS epistle of Paul, written, as is supposed, about the year 59, is directed not to the church or churches of a single city, as some others are; but of a country or province; for so Galatia was. It is very probable, that these Galatians were first converted to the Christian faith by his ministry; but if he was not the instrument of planting, yet at least he had been employed in watering these churches, as is evident from this epistle itself, and also from Acts xviii. 23. where we find him going over all the country of Galatia and Phrygia in order, strengthening all the disciples.

While he was with them, they had expressed the greatest esteem and affection both for his person and ministry, but he had not been long absent from them, before some Judaizing teachers had got in among them, by whose arts and insinuations they were soon drawn into a meaner opinion both of the one and of the other.

That which these false teachers chiefly aimed at, was to draw them off from the truth as it is in Jesus, particularly in the great doctrine of justification, which they grossly perverted, by asserting the necessity of joining the observation of the law of Moses with faith in Christ in order to it; and the better to accomplish this their design, they did all they could to lessen the character and reputation of the apostle, and to raise up their own on the ruins of his; representing him as one who, if he was to be owned as an apostle, yet was much inferior to others, and particularly who deserved not such a regard as Peter, James, and John, whose followers, it is likely, they pretended to be: and in both these attempts they had but too great success.

This was the occasion of his writing this epistle; wherein he expresses his great concern, that they had suffered themselves to be so soon turned aside from the faith of the gospel; vindicates his own character and authority as an apostle against the aspersions of his enemies, showing that his mission and doctrine were both divine, and that he was not, upon any account, behind the very chiefest of the apostles, 2 Cor. xi. 5. He then sets himself to assert and maintain the great gospel doctrine of justification by faith without the works of the law, and to obviate some difficulties that might be apt to arise in their minds concerning it: and having established this important doctrine, he exhorts them to stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ had made them free, cautions them against the abuse of this liberty, gives them several very needful counsels and directions; and then concludes the epistle with giving them the true character of those false teachers by whom they had been insnared; and, on the contrary, reminds them of his own temper and behaviour. In all which his great scope and design was, to recover those that had been perverted, to settle those that might be wavering, and to confirm such among them as had kept their integrity.

Verses 1—5. Among the heaviest burdens which lay on the great apostle Paul was the care of all the churches: where many errors soon crept in, and Judaizing teachers sought to corrupt the simplicity of the gospel, and therewith to decry him who was the zealous defender of its glorious privileges. No where had these seducers practised with more success than among the Galatians: for whose recovery to the purity of the faith, the apostle writes this epistle.

1. He begins with his apostolical address. Paul an apostle, not of men, neither by man, not assuming a character to which he had no title, nor acting under any ordination merely human, but immediately called to this high office, and commissioned by Jesus Christ himself, who personally appeared to him; and God the Father, who raised him from the dead declaring thereby his perfect satisfaction in the atonement and righteousness of his Son; and therefore Paul's commission bore this eminent distinction, that, whilst the chief apostles were only ordained by Jesus in the days of his humiliation, the great apostle of the Gentiles received his call and office from the glorified Redeemer, exalted on his mediatorial throne.

2. All the brethren which were with him joined the apostle in his address to the churches of Galatia, concurring with him in sentiment, and declaring thereby their approbation of the doctrines which he maintained, and of the just reproofs he was about to give. No titles of respect or regard are added: their general defection probably withheld him from making any honourable mention of them as was usual in his other epistles. Only,

3. He wishes that the best of blessings may attend them. Grace be with you, in all its happy effects of pardon, comfort, strength, purity, perseverance, and peace the consequence thereof: both proceeding as a free and sovereign act of favour from God the Father, and from our Lord Jesus Christ, the meritorious cause of all our mercies, who gave himself for our sins in infinite compassion to our wretched state, humbling himself to take our nature upon him, and as our substitute and representative to bear our sins in his own body on the tree, that he might obtain eternal redemption for us, and deliver us from this present evil world, from the guilt and condemnation under which it lies, and from the power of iniquity by which it is enslaved; and this hath our adored Redeemer done for us according to the will of God, and, or even, our Father, who is reconciled to us by the blood of his cross, and regards us as dear children. To whom be glory for ever and ever, Amen! Both to the Father and his coequal Son, for such a contrivance of infinite love and grace, in order to the redemption of lost souls, be all praise and honour ascribed by men and angels, in time and to eternity. Note, (1.) The oblation of Jesus once for all, is the only substantial foundation of the sinner's hope towards God. (2.) This world in which we dwell is full of evil: we must in spirit and temper be delivered from it, or we shall be condemned with it.

6. I marvel that ye are so [n] soon removed from him that [l] called you into the grace of Christ unto [k] another gospel: 7. Which is not another; [l] but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. 8. But [m] though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. 9. As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you [n] than that ye have received, let him be accursed.

Verses 6—9. Abrupt the apostle hastens to his point, and expresses,

1. His astonishment at their defection from the faith. I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ, from the blessed God himself, and from us his ministers, unto another gospel, different from that which we preached to you, wherein the glorious grace of a Redeemer was exalted: which new doctrine is not indeed another gospel, bringing no glad tidings to the sinful soul of free pardon and salvation by Jesus Christ, but is clogged with conditions which it is, impracticable for a fallen creature to perform; but the truth is there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ, destroying the riches of the grace, and adulterating the truth with the base alloy of error. Note, (1.) They who in whole or in part would introduce works as the gospel condition of justification before God, are the most dangerous perverters of the souls of men. (2.) There is but one way to regain the lost favour of God, and that is through grace by faith: and they who propose any other must perish with a lie in their right hand.

2. He expresses his detestation of any other pretended gospel besides that which he had preached to them. But though we, or an angel from heaven, if we could suppose it possible, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed, and lie down under the most dreadful anathemas of divine vengeance. As we said before, with the deepest solemnity I repeat it, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received from us, let him be accursed.

10. For [o] do I now persuade men, or God? or do I seek to please men? for if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ. 11. But I certify you, brethren, [p] that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man. 12. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ. 13. For ye have heard of my conversation in time past in the Jews' religion, how that [q] beyond measure I persecuted the church of God, and wasted it: 14. [r] And profited in the Jews' religion above many my * equals in mine own nation, being more exceedingly zealous of the traditions of my fathers. 15. But when it pleased God, who [s] separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace, 16. [t] To reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen; [u] immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood: 17. Neither went I up to Jerusalem to them which were apostles before me; but I went into Arabia, and returned again unto Damascus. 18. Then after three years I [x] went up to Jerusalem to see Peter, and abode with him fifteen days. 19. But [y] other of the apostles saw I none, save James the Lord's brother. 20. Now the things which I write unto you, behold, [z] before God, I lie not. 21. [a] Afterwards I came into the regions of Syria and Cilicia; 22. And was unknown by face unto [b] the churches of Judea which were [c] in Christ: 23. But they had heard only, [d] that he which persecuted us in times past now preacheth the faith which once he destroyed. 24. And they [e] glorified God in me.

Verses 10—24. To vindicate himself from the aspersions of the Judaizing teachers who affected to set up Peter and the other apostles as far his superiors, he enters into a detail of his divine mission and ministry.

1. He declares the scope of his preaching. Do I now persuade men, or God, endeavouring to engage them to obey human inventions, or to submit to the gospel of the blessed God? or do I seek to please men, and ingratiate myself with you, as the Jewish zealots? No. For I am well persuaded, that, if I yet pleased men, and made that my study to accommodate the gospel to their prejudices, I should not be the servant of Christ, and with fidelity and simplicity discharge the trust committed to me. Note, (1.) To please God, not men, must be our great design. (2.) It is impossible that our fidelity in preaching the gospel should not offend those who, in pride and self-sufficiency, cannot bear the humbling truth of the necessity of submission to the righteousness of God therein revealed.

2. He demonstrates to them the divinity of his mission. The gospel he preached was not after man, a human invention, or received at second hand from men's information, but immediately by revelation from the exalted Jesus, now entered into his glory. They knew his past conversation: what a bigot he had been for Judaism: how greatly he had excelled many of his fellow-students in rabbinical knowledge, exactly skilled in all their laws and traditions: to propagate these he had exerted all his zeal, and, with rage approaching madness, had persecuted the professors of the Christian name with the savage fury of the most barbarous foe. No prejudices of education, therefore, could have led him to embrace Christianity; but, on the contrary, such a rivetted enmity against it, could be only overcome by some very extraordinary method of conviction. But when it pleased God, who hath in his hands the hearts of all men, who of his rich and sovereign grace separated me from my mother's womb, having predestinated me for his own to serve him in the gospel, and called me by his grace, in such a distinguishing manner, when I was going with the most implacable enmity to persecute the disciples at Damascus; when, I say, God graciously was pleased then to reveal his Son in me, making my inmost soul, by divine irradiation, acquainted with the fulness of the redemption which is in him, that I might preach him among the heathen, as peculiarly ordained to be their apostle, immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood, consulting no longer my own worldly ease, interest, or honour, or asking advice about what God had so clearly determined: neither went I up to Jerusalem, to them which were apostles before me, as if I needed instruction, or a confirmation in my office; but, divinely taught and ordained, I immediately entered on my work, and went into Arabia, where the gospel had not been preached before, and returned again unto Damascus. Then, after three years, I went up to Jerusalem, to see Peter, not to learn of him, but to communicate the success of my labours, and enjoy the comforts of Christian fellowship with him and the rest of the brethren there; and abode with him only fifteen days. But other of the apostles saw I none, save James the Lord's brother, or near kinsman; so that I received not my knowledge or commission from them. Now the things which I write unto you, behold before God, I lie not, but with the deepest solemnity appeal to him for the truths I advance. Afterwards I came into the regions of Syria and Cilicia, preaching the gospel; and was, during many years, unknown by face unto the churches which were in Christ, and professed faith in his name; so that from them I could not have received any knowledge of the truth. But they had heard only, That he which persecuted us in times past, now preached the faith which he once destroyed. And they glorified God in me, ascribing to him praise for my wondrous conversion. Note, (1.) Christ must be revealed by his Spirit in us, as well as by his word to us, if we would know him to the saving of our souls. (2.) When occasion requires it, we honour God by a solemn appeal to him.

CHAP. II.—ANNO DOMINI, 59.

The apostle in this chapter continues the relation of his past life and conduct, and with the same view, 1. Informs them of another journey which he took to Jerusalem many years after the former, and how he behaved himself at that time, ver. 1—11. And, 2. Gives them an account of another interview he had with the apostle Peter at Antioch, and how he was obliged to behave himself towards him there. And from the subject matter of that conversation, he proceeds to discourse on the great doctrine of justification by faith in Christ without the works of the law; which it was the main design of this epistle to establish, and which he enlarges more upon in the two following chapters.

cir. 52.
1. [a] THEN, fourteen years after, I went up again to Jerusalem with Barnabas, and took Titus with me also. 2. And I went up [b] by revelation, and communicated unto them that gospel which [c] I preach among the Gentiles, but [d] privately to them which were of reputation, [e] lest by any means I should run, or had run, in vain. 3. [f] But neither Titus, who was with me, being a Greek, was compelled to be circumcised: 4. And [g] that because of false brethren unawares brought in, who came in privily to spy out our liberty which we have in Christ Jesus, that they might bring us into bondage: 5. [h] To whom we gave place by subjection, no, not for an hour; that the truth of the gospel might continue with you. 6. But of those [i] who seemed to be somewhat; whatsoever they were, it maketh no matter to me: [k] God accepteth no man's person; for they who seemed to be somewhat in conference added nothing to me. 7. But, contrariwise, when they saw that the [l] gospel of the uncircumcision was committed unto me, as the [m] gospel of the circumcision was unto Peter; 8. (For he that [n] wrought effectually in Peter to the apostleship of the circumcision, the same was [o] mighty in me toward the Gentiles:) 9. And when James, Cephas, and John, who seemed to be [p] pillars, perceived [q] the grace that was given unto me, they gave to me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship; [r] that we should go unto the heathen, and they unto the circumcision. 10. [s] Only they would that we should remember the poor; the same which I also was forward to do.

Verses 1—10. The apostle, in vindication of his divine mission and ministry, as in nothing inferior to the other apostles, relates what passed at Jerusalem, when fourteen years after his conversion, he went up thither, with Barnabas and Titus, by a special revelation from God, on occasion of the dissensions which the Jewish teachers had raised in the church at Antioch about the necessity of circumcising the Gentiles, and engaging them to keep the law of Moses.

1. He communicated, and explained in conversation, to those who were of greatest note and reputation, the gospel which he preached among the Gentiles, in all its freedom and latitude, but privately, because of the known prejudices which many of the Jewish Christians entertained concerning the necessity of still observing the law. And this method he took, lest by any means he should run or had run in vain, and, through the clamours of the hot zealots for Judaism, his past labours should have been in some measure rendered abortive, or his future usefulness be obstructed.

2. Though he acted with all prudence, he made no sinful compliance to their prejudices, maintaining the purity of the gospel, and firm to his principles that the Gentiles were in no manner obliged to the observation of the Mosaical law; therefore, though Titus was a Greek, he was not compelled to be circumcised; nor did the apostles insist upon it. And Paul took Titus, a Gentile Christian and minister of the gospel, on purpose that in him he might bear a public testimony against those false brethren who had craftily insinuated themselves into the church at Antioch, and with prying eyes observed the apostle's conduct at Jerusalem, whether he would there maintain the liberty of the Christian Gentiles from the Mosaical institutions. For they would have been happy if they could have had such a plea as the circumcision of Titus, to urge the same upon the Gentile converts. But not for an hour would the apostle and his colleague Barnabas give way to such a dangerous imposition, that the truth and freedom of the gospel might be maintained inviolable, and the Gentiles enjoy that entire liberty from every yoke of bondage, which in Christ Jesus was preached unto them. Note, False brethren are our most dangerous foes. Against them we need peculiar watchfulness.

3. Though he conferred with the apostles of chief eminence, and who were so preferred to him by the Judaizing teachers, whatever had been the case formerly (ποτε,) and whatever privileges they had enjoyed above him, that affected not the matter at present, God, who accepteth no man's person, can, when he pleases, reveal his gospel to the bitterest enemy of the truth, and raise the vilest persecutor to the honour of apostleship. However great the names of Peter, James, and John were, they added nothing to him, nor contributed the least to his improvement in knowledge; so thoroughly had he been taught of God the mysteries of gospel truth.

4. The issue of the conference was the perfect satisfaction expressed by the apostles at Jerusalem in what they heard; it appearing most undeniably, that the same Lord, who had wrought by Peter's ministry among the Jews, who was more particularly sent to them, had wrought as effectually by Paul among the Gentiles; to whom they therefore concluded the apostleship of the Gentiles was committed. Therefore these pillars of the church, James, Cephas, and John, convinced of the grace and apostleship conferred upon him, with cordial affection gave to him and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship; and concurred in their sentiments, that it fully appeared the will of God, that Paul and his fellow-labourer should go to the Gentiles more immediately; whilst their own ministry was more generally confined to the Jews: only they recommended it to them that they should remember the poor saints in Judea, and obtain some relief for them from the Gentile churches; a service in which Paul warmly engaged. So that it was evident, from the result of this conversation, that there was a perfect harmony in doctrine between Paul and the apostles at Jerusalem, and that they fully recognized his divine authority and mission.

11. [t] But when Peter was come to Antioch, I withstood him to the face, because he was to be blamed. 12. [u] For before that certain came from James, he did eat with the Gentiles: but when they were come, he [x] withdrew, and separated himself, fearing them which were of the circumcision. 13. [y] And the other Jews dissembled likewise with him; insomuch that Barnabas also was carried away with their dissimulation. 14. But when I saw that they [z] walked not uprightly, according to the truth of the gospel, I said unto Peter [a] before them all, [b] If thou, being a Jew, livest after the manner of Gentiles, and not as do the Jews, why compellest thou the Gentiles to live as do the Jews? 15. [c] We who are Jews by nature, and not sinners of the Gentiles, 16. [d] Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ, even [e] we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ, and not by the works of the law: [f] for by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified. 17. But if, [g] while we seek to be justified by Christ, we ourselves also are found [h] sinners, is therefore Christ the [i] minister of sin? [k] God forbid. 18. For if [l] I build again the things which I destroyed, I make myself a transgressor. 19. For I [m] through the law [n] am dead to the law, [o] that I might live unto God. 20. [p] I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: [q] and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, [r] who loved me, and gave himself for me. 21. I do not frustrate the grace of God: for [s] if righteousness come by the law, then Christ is dead in vain.

Verses 11—21. Nothing could serve more effectually to establish the character of the great apostle of the Gentiles than the occurrence here recorded, wherein, so far from being Peter's inferior, as the Judaizing teachers suggested, he appears his faithful and zealous reprover.

1. Peter's fault was, that, at his coming to Antioch, he freely communed with the Gentile Christians, and eat and drank with them, though uncircumcised; but on the arrival of some Jewish brethren sent from James, he temporized, and, for fear of offending the prejudiced Judaizers, to the great discouragement of the Gentile brethren, he suspended his former familiar intercourse with them; and influenced by him, the Jewish Christians at Antioch dissembled likewise, and withdrew from free converse, as before, with their Gentile brethren; and, overcome by such bad examples, even Barnabas himself was carried away with their dissimulation, and, contrary to all his former conduct and teaching, joined in this separation: for which Peter most justly was to be blamed. Note, (1.) The fear of men, and undue desire of their esteem, hath sometimes warped the most steady Christians from the simplicity of the gospel. (2.) Bad examples are ever dangerous, especially the examples of those who are high in men's esteem, and whose influence is most extensive.

2. The rebuke Paul gave him was such as his dissimulation deserved. And as the offence given was public; publicly, and to his face, he with noble fidelity withstood him; and, seeing him so sadly decline from the path of truth, and the liberty of the gospel, he addressed himself to Peter, and said unto him, before them all, If thou, being a Jew, livest after the manner of Gentiles, and not as do the Jews, satisfied that the ceremonial law is no longer binding, why compellest thou the Gentiles to live as do the Jews, and by the example thou hast lately shown wouldest enslave their consciences to the Mosaical institutions, as if necessary to their acceptance with God? What a glaring contradiction appears between such a conduct and your late avowed principles and practice!

3. He suggests the strongest arguments for the unreasonableness of such a conduct, since all distinction of Jew and Gentile now was ceased, both needing the same Redeemer, and expecting to be justified by the same rich grace of the gospel. We who are Jews by nature, God's chosen people, and trained up in the law; and not sinners of the Gentiles, who in general are looked upon by the Jews as persons abandoned and reprobate; knowing that a man is not, cannot be justified by the works of the law which none can perfectly fulfil; but by the faith of Jesus Christ, even we have believed in Jesus Christ for pardon and acceptance with God, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ, through that divine righteousness which he wrought out for us; and not by the works of the law: and if this was the case with us, much more must the Gentiles have recourse to the same free grace; for by the works of the law, moral or ceremonial, shall no flesh be justified, none being able to produce a righteousness adequate to its demands. But if, while we seek to be justified by Christ, we ourselves are found sinners, as must be the case of those who are under the law, Rom. iii. 9. is therefore Christ the minister of sin, who, notwithstanding all he hath done for us and in us, would in such a case leave us under the condemning guilt and prevailing power of sin? God forbid; with abhorrence is the thought to be rejected. Yet this would be the consequence of seeking to the law for acceptance with God, for if I build again the things which I destroyed, and, after preaching the grace of the gospel, have recourse to the law for justification before God, I make myself a transgressor, contradict my own doctrine, and acknowledge myself still under guilt and condemnation, which my faith in Christ hath not removed. So inconsistent was this behaviour therefore in Peter and his associates.

4. Though some might object to the doctrine of free justification without the deeds of the law, the apostle declares his own and every believer's judgment and practice. for I through the law am dead to the law, unable to obey it as a covenant of life, and renouncing all my expectations from it, that I might live unto God, abiding in a constant state of favour with him through the Redeemer's righteousness, and quickened by his grace to newness of life. I am crucified with Christ, as my law-fulfiller; in him the law is satisfied, and hath no more demands upon me than it hath upon the dead: nevertheless I live in a state of reconciliation with God, bringing forth the fruits of righteousness; yet not I by any inherent power or principle in myself, but Christ liveth in me; by virtue of union with him I possess that righteousness which gives me a title to life, and receive from him, as my head of vital influence, his quickening Spirit: and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live not after the flesh, but by the faith of the Son of God, placing my whole dependence upon him, and drawing continual supplies of grace and strength out of his fulness who loved me, and gave himself for me, to make a complete atonement, and to bring in an everlasting righteousness, for me and all who embrace his great salvation. I do not frustrate the grace of God, and slight, as of no value, the transcendent favour of God's dear Son, and the righteousness unto life which is in him, as they do who go to the works of the law for acceptance with God: for if righteousness come by the law, and were to be obtained by our personal obedience, then Christ is dead in vain; for in that case righteousness and salvation might have been obtained without him. Note, (1.) We must die to the law, and renounce all hope of being justified thereby, before we can fly to Jesus, and live unto God. (2.) By faith alone is the life of our souls maintained, whilst from the fulness of our Redeemer we derive the constant supplies of grace and strength. (3.) All who either in whole or part place their dependence on their own doings and duties for acceptance with God, they make Christ to have died in vain.

CHAP. III.—ANNO DOMINI, 58.

The apostle, in this chapter, 1. Reproves the Galatians for their folly in suffering themselves to be drawn away from the faith of the gospel. 2. He proves the doctrine which he had reproved them for departing from, viz. That of justification by faith, without the works of the law. (1.) From the example of Abraham's justification. (2.) From the nature and tenor of the law. (3.) From the express testimony of the Old Testament. And (4.) From the stability of the covenant of God with Abraham. And lest any should hereupon say, Wherefore then serveth the law? He answers, [1.] It was added because of transgressions. [2.] It was given to convince the world of the necessity of a Saviour. [3.] It was designed as a schoolmaster to bring us to Christ. And then he concludes the chapter, by acquainting us with the privileges of Christians under the gospel state.

1. O FOOLISH Galatians, who hath [a] bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth, before whose eyes [b] Jesus Christ hath been evidently set forth crucified among you? 2. This only would I learn of you, Received ye [c] the Spirit by the works of the law, or by [d] the hearing of faith? 3. [e] Are ye so foolish? having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh? 4. [f] Have ye suffered * so many things in vain? if it be yet in vain. 5. He therefore that [g] ministereth to you the Spirit, and worketh miracles among you, doeth he it by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?

Verses 1—5. With warm expostulation, and sharp rebuke, the apostle upbraids the stupidity and folly of these Galatians, who had departed so grievously from the simplicity of the gospel. O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you, what emissary of Satan by his craft hath perverted your souls, that you should not obey the truth, but depart from the grand principles of the gospel, renouncing the doctrine of free justification through the Redeemer's blood and righteousness? Several things served to aggravate their folly:

1. The clear display of the truth which had been made to them. Before whose eyes Jesus Christ had been evidently set forth, and his death and sufferings, with all the effects and design of them, represented in such a lively manner, as if he had been crucified among you.

2. What they had received under the ministration of the gospel. This only would I learn of you, Received ye the Spirit, his gifts and grace, by the works of the law, by the ministration of it or obedience to it, or by the hearing of faith, the preaching of justification through the free grace of a Redeemer? They must own it was through the latter: and therefore most inexcusable was their folly to quit that gospel, the blessed and most happy effects of which they had experienced.

3. Having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh? and, forsaking your dependence on the grace of the gospel, do you expect to reach perfection by your obedience to the law? Are ye so foolish to have recourse to the ministration of death, in order to obtain righteousness unto life?

4. Have ye suffered so many things in vain, for the cause of Christ and the profession of the gospel? How absurd were it to expose yourselves thus, if it be yet in vain, and after all you should apostatize, and lose the blessings of your profession and sufferings? You must then of all men be most foolish and most miserable.

5. He therefore that ministereth to you the Spirit, and worketh miracles among you, doeth he it by the works of the law, as the way of justification, or by the hearing of faith, in the ministry of the gospel? If these miracles, as was evident, were wrought in confirmation of the doctrines of grace, how preposterously absurd were they to quit the truth confirmed by such divine and incontestable evidence!

6. [h] Even as Abraham believed God, and it was † accounted to him for righteousness. 7. Know ye therefore that [i] they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham. 8. And [k] the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, [l] In thee shall all nations be blessed. 9. [m] So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham. 10. [n] For as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse: for it is written, [o] Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them. 11. But [p] that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident: for, [q] The just shall live by faith. 12. And [r] the law is not of faith: but, [s] The man that doeth them shall live in them. 13. [t] Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us: for it is written, [u] Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree: 14. [x] That the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ; that we [y] might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith. 15. Brethren, [z] I speak after the manner of men; Though it be but a man's ‡ covenant, yet if it be confirmed, no man disannulleth, or addeth thereto. 16. Now [a] to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ. 17. And this I say, that the covenant, that [b] was confirmed before of God in Christ, [c] the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that [d] it should make the promise of none effect. 18. For [e] if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise: but God gave it to Abraham by promise.

Verses 6—18. The apostle having sharply rebuked the folly of the Galatians in departing from the truth, proceeds to confirm the great doctrine of justification by faith alone, from which they had been seduced. And he proves it,

1. By the example of Abraham. He believed God, and it was accounted to him for righteousness: The Lord Messiah, on whom his faith rested, became his justifying righteousness before God, Know ye therefore, that they who are of faith, and place their whole dependence for acceptance with God on the same object, they are the spiritual children of Abraham. And the Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, when neither circumcision was yet instituted, nor the law given, saying, In thee, that is, in thy seed, the Messiah, shall all nations be blessed, accepted of God in him, and admitted to the participation of all the privileges of God's peculiar people. So then it is evident from hence, that they who be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham, without the least respect to the works of the law.

2. It is impossible for any man to be justified before God any other way than by faith. For as many as are of the works of the law, and seek justification and salvation on the footing of personal righteousness, are, and must be, under the curse denounced on every transgressor: for as it is written, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them; the least failure in thought, word, or deed, but once, even in the longest life, effectually cuts off the sinner from all hope by the law, and leaves him under the wrath of an offended God. Therefore Christ, viewing our desperate guilt and hopeless misery, hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, by the price of his own blood, being made a curse for us, by divine constitution appointed to be our surety, treated by inexorable justice as a trangressor, and bearing, in his own body on the cross, the punishment due to our iniquities: for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree. And to this most painful, shameful, and accursed death he submitted, that the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ, and righteousness be imputed to them also for justification; that we, whether Jews or Gentiles, being taken into a state of acceptance with God, might receive the promise of the Spirit, in all his plenitude of gifts, graces, and consolations, through faith in the Redeemer, and not on account of any works of our own, or legal services. Note, (1.) Every man, being unable to keep the law in perfection, is consequently a transgressor, and sealed up under wrath. (2.) Despair is written on every effort of the fallen sinner to escape from the condemnation under which he lies. (3.) The gospel brings relief to the desperate, by revealing to us a Divine Substitute, all-sufficient to bear our sins, and to restore us to the enjoyment of God's forfeited favour. (4.) By faith alone we embrace, and actually possess, all the blessings obtained for us in and by the great Redeemer.

3. The scriptures of the Old Testament are express to the point. But that no man is justified by the works of the law in the sight of God, it is evident: for, the just shall live by faith, or the just by faith shall live; he only who by faith is counted righteous before God, can live here in a state of favour with him, and hereafter be admitted to the enjoyment of him. And the law is not of faith: but the way it prescribes for justification is directly opposite, even by perfect personal obedience: The man that doeth them, and keeps in spirit and practice, universally and abidingly, all the commands enjoined, shall live in them: but every defect, flaw, or failure, brings down death as the wages of sin. So that the saints of old were justified in the same way as we are, and the gospel was preached to them even as unto us.

4. The stability of the covenant made with Abraham could not be vacated by the law. Brethren, I speak after the manner of men, and use a familiar instance to elucidate the point in hand: though it be but a man's covenant, yet, if it be confirmed, and duly signed and sealed, no man disannulleth or addeth thereunto, except the parties interested by mutual consent. Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made, of justification, adoption, grace, and glory. He saith not to seeds, as of many, as if the promises referred to all his natural as well as spiritual children; but as of one, in the singular number, and to thy seed, which is Christ, who was personally meant, and in whom all the spiritual seed are mystically included. And this I say, as evident, that the covenant which was confirmed before, to Abraham, of God in Christ, or with respect to Christ, who was the Mediator, Surety, and Substance of the covenant in his own person, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect, and introduce another way of justification before God different from, yea, contrary to, that which God had before established with Abraham. For if the inheritance be of the law, and the title to eternal life be obtained by personal obedience, it is no more of promise, but God gave it, graciously and absolutely, to Abraham by promise, which no subsequent dispensation could set aside; for God is not a man that he should lie, nor the son of man that he should repent; and therefore the promise of justification, adoption, and the internal inheritance, is in Christ secured to all the spiritual seed of faithful Abraham.

19. Wherefore then serveth the law? [f] It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made; and it was ordained [g] by angels in the hand of [h] a mediator. 20. [i] Now a mediator is not a mediator of one; but God is one. 21. Is the law then against the promises of God? God forbid: for if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law. 22. But the scripture hath concluded [k] all under sin, [l] that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe. 23. [m] But before faith came, we were kept under the law, shut up unto the faith which should afterwards be revealed. 24. Wherefore the law was [n] our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. 25. But after that faith is come, [o] we are no longer under a schoolmaster. 26. [p] For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. 27. For [q] as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. 28. [r] There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. 29. [s] And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise.

Verses 19—29. In answer to the objections which he knew the Jewish zealots would raise, as if he derogated from the honour of the law, and rendered it useless, he states and answers them.

1. They might say, Wherefore then serveth the law, if no creature can be justified or saved by it? I reply, it was added because of transgressions, in subservience to the design of the covenant of grace, in order to restrain by its penalty, and to convince, discover, and condemn the transgressors, showing them the necessity of a better righteousness than their own, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made, and who should be the end of the law for righteousness to every believer; and it was ordained by angels, delivered by their ministry, in the hand of a mediator, even Moses, who was typical of the great Mediator, Jesus Christ. Now a mediator is not a mediator of one, but stands between the two parties; but God is one, unchangeable in his purposes and promises; and as the Gentiles were not represented at all at mount Sinai, nor regarded as one of the parties in that covenant, which was a transaction merely between God and Abraham's natural seed, this cannot exclude them from the benefit of the antecedent promise which God made to Abraham and his spiritual seed.

2. Some may argue from hence, Is the law then against the promises of God, made to Abraham, and his seed? are they at variance with each other? God forbid: there is the most perfect harmony between them. For if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law; and could man have kept in his own person the righteousness of the law, his title would have been clear, and the promised Substitute had been unnecessary; but the Scripture hath concluded all under sin, hath shut up every man, as in a dungeon, under the guilt and condemnation of sin, all having come short of the glory of God; that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe, and that pardon and salvation might come to us as the free gift of God in him. But before faith came, before Christ, the great object of faith, appeared incarnate, and his gospel was more clearly manifested, we, who were under the Mosaic dispensation, were kept under the law, as in a castle, separate from other nations, and, as captives under a yoke of bondage, shut up in close custody unto the faith which should afterwards be revealed, and till Christ, opening to us a door of hope, should bring us from this state of servitude into the glorious liberty of the sons of God. Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster, and served most directly to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith: the moral precepts and sanction convinced us of our desperate case, as unable to answer the demands of the law, and obnoxious to the curse; the ceremonial institutions led us to look for the divine Substitute, in all the sacrifices which were enjoined for the expiation of sin; and both taught the necessity of justification by faith through a better righteousness than our own. But after that faith is come, and Christ, the sinner's Substitute, hath appeared, and is held forth to us in the gospel, we are no longer under a schoolmaster, being delivered from our former state of minority and legal bondage. For now ye who believe are all the children of God by faith in Jesus Christ, arrived to maturity of age, and entitled to all the blessings of adoption, which Jesus hath obtained for the many sons whom he shall bring unto glory. For as many of you, whether Jews or Gentiles, as have been baptized into Christ, by faith really united to him, and by baptism making open profession of him, have put on Christ, and, clothed in his divine righteousness, have a title to all spiritual and eternal blessings. There is now neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, their is neither male nor female, all distinction of nation, sex, condition, is ceased; for ye, who believe, are all one in Christ Jesus, united to him in one body, and alike freely partakers of all the privileges contained in the eternal covenant of redemption. And if ye be Christ's, living members of his body mystical, then are ye Abraham's seed; in a spiritual sense, and heirs according to the promise, entitled to claim, under Christ, your great covenant head, all the blessings which he hath purchased for his redeemed. So that circumcision, and the Mosaical institutions, are in no wise necessary, either for present pardon or eternal salvation.

CHAP. IV.—ANNO DOMINI, 60.

The apostle in this chapter, in correspondence with his great design, shows us, (1.) The great excellence of the gospel state above the legal, ver. 1—8. (2.) The happy change that was made in them at their conversion, ver. 8—12. (3.) The affection they had had for him and his ministry, ver. 11—17. (4.) The character of the false teachers by whom they had been perverted, ver. 17, 18. (5.) The very tender affection he had for them, ver. 19, 20. (6.) The history of Isaac and Ishmael, by a comparison taken from which he illustrates the difference between such as trusted on Christ, and such as trusted in the law.

1. NOW I say, That the heir, as long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a servant, though he be lord of all; 2. But is under tutors and governors until the time appointed of the father. 3. Even so we, [a] when we were children, were in bondage under the * elements of the world: 4. But when [b] the fulness of the time was come, [c] God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, 5. [d] To redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons. 6. And because ye are sons, [e] God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father. 7. Wherefore [f] thou art no more a servant, but a son; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ.

Verses 1—7. The apostle had hinted before, that the state of those who were under the law, was a kind of minority. He here enlarges on that subject, showing the vast superiority of the gospel above the legal dispensation.

1. Before Christ came, they were in a state of non-age. Now I say that the heir, as long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a servant, though he be lord of all, and entitled to the inheritance, but is under tutors and governors, until the time appointed of the father, when he should be declared of age, and enter upon the management of his own affairs. Even so we, and all the people of God under the Old Testament, when we were children, in the infantile state of the church, were in bondage under the elements of the world, subject to the law, with all the carnal ordinances, which were, as the first letters of the alphabet, designed to lead us on to higher attainments, and kept us, during this time of non-age, in a state of fear, as children who dread correction, if they perform not their appointed tasks. But,

2. Under the gospel dispensation our condition is much happier. When the fulness of the time was come, appointed in the eternal decree, God sent forth his Son, his only begotten, one in the same divine nature and essence, born of a woman, that he might be manifested in the flesh, made under the law, appointed both to endure the penalty due to our transgressions, and by his obedience to the precept in our stead, to bring in an everlasting righteousness for us, that he might redeem them that are under the law, under its bondage and curse, that we, who believe in him, might receive the adoption of sons, admitted to that high privilege, with all its happy consequences. And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, through the glorified Redeemer, who hath all fulness of the Spirit to bestow on his people, and forms their hearts, by his divine operations, to the temper becoming the high dignity and relation with which they are honoured; so that, through the effectual working of the Holy Ghost, we are enabled, with fiducial dependence, filial love, and sacred joy, to approach a throne of grace, crying, Abba, Father. Wherefore, whenever this Spirit is given, thou art no more a servant, but a son, admitted to that honourable place in God's family; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ, and entitled to everlasting blessedness: so that to return to the law for acceptance with God, is absurd and needless. Note, (1.) God manifest in the flesh is the foundation of every hope to the sinner. (2) If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his; the grace of adoption always accompanies the privilege of adoption. (3.) It is happy for the soul that is enabled with humble boldness to approach a holy God, crying, Abba, Father; and claiming this kindred with him, which he will not disown. (4.) Our present adoption is the earnest of our eternal redemption.

8. Howbeit then, [g] when ye knew not God, ye did service unto them which by nature are no gods. 9. But now, [h] after that ye have known God, or rather are known of God, how turn ye † again to the weak and beggarly ‡ elements, whereunto ye desire again to be in bondage? 10. [i] Ye observe days, and months, and times, and years. 11. [k] I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labour in vain.

Verses 8—11. To show them the glaring folly of their having recourse to the law for justification, he reminds them,

1. Of their former state of Gentilism. Howbeit then, when ye knew not God, grossly ignorant of his being, perfections, and attributes, and, in fact, without God in the world, ye did service unto them which by nature are no gods, worshipping senseless idols, and ascribing divinity to stocks and stones. In this state of horrid ignorance and guilt did the gospel find them, and called them out of darkness into marvellous light.

2. How absurd then was their defection from the truth which they had received! But now after that ye have known God, through the gospel of his dear Son, or rather are known of God, approved and accepted of him in the Redeemer, how turn ye again to the weak and beggarly elements, whereunto ye desire again to be in bondage? What infatuation hath seized you, to leave the gospel dispensation of light, love, and liberty, for the bondage, darkness, and fear of the Mosaical institutions, weak and insufficient to cleanse the soul from guilt, or to obtain acceptance with God; and beggarly, when compared to the superior riches of gospel grace. Ye observe days, and months, and times, and years, placing dependence on the ceremonial ordinances of the Jewish ritual, as essential to your justification before God. And where this is the case, I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labour in vain, and departing thus from the fundamentals of the gospel, notwithstanding all our preaching, you should finally perish. Note, (1.) Many who make, for a while, fair professions, prove, in the end, foul apostates. (2.) Nothing more effectually destroys the soul, than a departure from that fundamental point of the gospel, justification by faith alone. (3.) It is a deep concern to the true ministers of Christ, when they, in whom they hoped to see the fruit of their labours, disappoint their expectations.

12. Brethren, I beseech you, [l] be as I am; for I am as ye are: [m] ye have not injured me at all. 13. own eyes, and have given them to me. 16. [r] Am I therefore become your enemy, because I tell you the truth?

Verses 12—16. The apostle here,

1. With affectionate address desires to win upon them. Brethren, I beseech you, be as I am, united with me in affection as I am to you, and imitate my example, leaving these Jewish rites as matters of indifference, and cleaving to Christ and his righteousness only for justification before God; for I am as ye are, one with you in fervent charity, and we are equally entitled to the privileges of the gospel: ye have not injured me at all; the injury you do is to Christ and your own souls; and what I say proceeds not from any private resentment, but purely from a zeal for his glory and your good; and if any disrespect may have been cast on me, I entirely overlook it. Note, The rebuke that is tempered with love will always be most effectual.

2. He reminds them of the former affection and esteem which they had showed him. Ye know how, through infirmity of the flesh, I preached the gospel unto you at the first. And my temptation in the flesh, (whether his sufferings, weakness of body, or ungraceful appearance, they knew what he meant, though we do not for certain; but whatever it was, he could say) ye despised not, nor rejected; did not therefore slight my ministry, nor treat my person with contempt, but received me as an angel of God, with all veneration and regard, as a messenger sent from heaven, yea, even as Christ Jesus; had he himself appeared in the flesh among you, religious adoration excepted, ye could not have paid him greater respect. Where is then the blessedness you spoke of? those ardent wishes for my happiness, and the delight you expressed in the gospel which I preached unto you? for I bear you record, that if it had been possible, ye would have plucked out your own eyes, and have given them unto me, counting nothing too great to testify the sense of your gratitude towards me. Note, Many, in their first love, are all on fire for Christ, and never think they can enough testify their regard to the ministers of their conversion, who by and by grow cold or perverted from the truth, and treat with contempt those whom they once respected as almost angelical.

3. He expostulates with them on the strange alteration which now appeared. Am I therefore become your enemy, because I tell you the truth, and kindly warn you of the deadly consequences of your defection from the purity of the gospel? Note, (1.) Truth, honestly spoken, often creates us enemies. (2.) Ministers may expect that their fidelity will offend. (3.) Whether men will hear or forbear, we must speak, nor fear any consequences.

s Rom. 10. 2. 2 Cor. 11. 2. ch. 6. 12. Phil. 2. 21.

17. [s] They zealously affect you, but not well; yea, they would exclude * you, that ye might affect them. 18. But it is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing, and not only when I am present with you.

* Or us.

Verses 17, 18. St Paul knew the spirit and temper with which the Judaizing teachers acted, and he,

1. Warns the Galatians of it. They zealously affect you, and pretend great zeal for you, but not well; their professions are dissembled, and their designs crafty; yea, they would exclude you from me and your true friends, who preach the pure gospel to you, that you might affect them, and yield your consciences up to their direction. Note, All is not gold which glitters; we should try, before we trust: hypocrisy, for selfish ends, can put on the fairest guise of truth.

2. He points out to them the rule they should follow. But it is good, and the proof of an excellent spirit, to be zealously affected always in a good thing, or to a good man, and not only when I am present with you, whilst an unsteady, wavering conduct shows that the heart is not well grounded in the truth, and discovers a dishonourable levity and inconstancy.

19. [t] My little children, of whom I [u] travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you, 20. I [x] desire to be present with you now, and to change my voice; for [y] I stand in doubt of you. 21. Tell me, ye [z] that desire to be under the law, do ye not hear the law? 22. For it is written, [a] That Abraham had two sons; the one by a bond maid, the other by a free woman. 23. [b] But he who was of the bond woman was born after the flesh; but he of the free woman was by promise. 24. Which things are [c] an allegory: for these are the two [d] covenants; the one from the mount Sina, [e] which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar. 25. For this Agar is mount Sina in Arabia, and † answereth to Jerusalem [f] which now is, and is in bondage with her children. 26. But [g] Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all. 27. For it is written, [h] Rejoice, thou barren that bearest not; break forth and cry, thou that travailest not: for the desolate hath many more children than she which hath an husband. 28. Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are [i] the children of promise. 29. [k] But as then he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit, even so it is now. 30. Nevertheless, what saith the scripture? [l] Cast out the bond woman and her son: for the son of the bond woman shall not be heir with the son of the free woman. 31. So then, brethren, [m] we are not children of the bond woman but of the free.

Verses 19—31. To engage their hearts, and prevail on them to return from their sad defection from the truth,

1. He expresses his tender affection towards them. My little children, dear to me, as such amidst all the weakness you discover, of whom I travail in birth again, with such agonies of spirit, longing for your present recovery, as when I first desired to turn you from your foul idolatry, until Christ be formed in you, your souls effectually brought under the influence of his gospel, and his image stamped upon your hearts; I desire to be present with you, that I might more fully enter upon the subject, confound the gainsayers, and defend the fundamental articles of Christianity from which you have swerved; and, if it so pleased the Lord to make my preaching effectual to your conversion, to change my voice from rebuke to consolation; for I own at present, I stand in doubt of you, whether you have ever truly believed to the saving of your souls, and may not yet be cast away. Note, (1.) Ministers travail in birth for immortal souls, and feel an affection for those whom they have begotten in the gospel, like the tender mother's sensibility towards her infant offspring. (2.) Christ can never be formed in the heart where self-righteousness and self-independence still prevail. (3.) It is no charity to think well, when we see evidently what is evil, though we wish to change our voice, and to behold a happy reformation.

2. He expostulates with the Judaizers, who sought justification by the deeds of the law. Tell me, ye that desire to be under the law, do ye not hear the law? If you attentively considered the history of Abraham, you would see the folly of your attempt. For it is written, that Abraham had two sons, the one by a bond-maid, Hagar an Egyptian, the other by a free-woman, Sarah. And he who was of the bond-maid, Ishmael, was born after the flesh, in the ordinary course of nature: but he of the free-woman, Isaac, was by promise, given of God, when both his parents were naturally incapable of issue. Which things are an allegory, or allegorized, and have a spiritual meaning, beyond the mere letter of the words; for these, Hagar and Sarah, are the figures of the two covenants; the one from the mount Sina, which gendereth to bondage, begetting a slavish spirit, and leaving the soul under condemnation, which is Agar, and represented by her. For this Agar is mount Sina in Arabia; and her being cast out with her son, is a lively figure of the rejection of those who are under the law, which was delivered on that mountain, and this bond-woman answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children, abandoned for their infidelity, and excluded from all the blessings of the covenant. But Jerusalem which is above, the church of the redeemed, who by faith in Christ look for glory and immortality, is free from all the condemnation of sin and the law, of which Sarah is the type, and may be considered as the mother of us all, whether Jews or Gentiles, who, like her son Isaac, are entitled to all the promised blessings. For it is written, with particular reference to Sarah and Hagar, Rejoice, thou barren that bearest not; break forth and cry, thou that travailest not; thou Gentile land, which, like Sarah, hast long been without ever bringing forth one child for God, now exult in thy vast progeny, for the desolate hath many more children than she which hath an husband, more converts springing from among the heathen, where all the hope of such a seed was despaired of, than are to be found among those who, under the Sinai covenant, were, during so many hundreds of years, espoused to the Lord as their husband. Now we, brethren, who through grace are joined to Christ by faith, as Isaac was, are the children of the promise, and heirs of the eternal inheritance. But as then he that was born after the flesh, (Ishmael) persecuted, with mockery and reproaches, him that was born after the Spirit, to wit, Isaac, the child of the promise, even so it is now, the carnal Jews, who contend for justification by the works of the law, deride and persecute us, who maintain that justification is by faith alone. Nevertheless, what saith the Scripture? Cast out the bond-woman and her son; for the son of the bond-woman shall not be heir with the son of the free-woman; and so surely will they be excluded from the heavenly inheritance, who seek it by the deeds of the law. So then we, brethren, who expect justification by faith only, are not children of the bond-woman, but of the free, and shall inherit that eternal life, from which they who are of the law, and depend upon their own doings for their acceptance with God, must be for ever excluded. Note, (1.) To understand the Scriptures, we must look further than the letter. (2.) Reproach and ridicule are, in God's account, persecution; and this, at least all who live godly in Christ Jesus, must endure.

CHAP. V.—ANNO DOMINI, 58.

In this chapter the apostle (1.) applies his foregoing discourse: exhorting them to stand fast in the liberty of the gospel, ver. 1—12. (2.) He cautions them against abusing their liberty, ver. 13—15. (3.) Exhorts them to walk after the Spirit, and not after the flesh, enumerating the works of each, ver. 16—25.

1. STAND [a] fast therefore in the [b] liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and [c] be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage. 2. Behold, I Paul say unto you, that [d] if ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing. 3. For I [e] testify again to every man that is circumcised, that he [f] is a debtor to do the whole law. 4. [g] Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace. 5. For [h] we through the Spirit wait [i] for the hope of righteousness by faith. 6. [k] For in Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision; but faith which worketh by love. 7. [l] Ye did run well; * who did hinder you, that ye should not obey the truth? 8. [m] This persuasion cometh not of him that calleth you. 9. [n] A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump. 10. [o] I have confidence in you through the Lord, that ye will be none otherwise minded: but [p] he that troubleth you shall bear his judgment, whosoever he be. 11. And I, brethren, [r] if I yet preach circumcision, why do I yet suffer persecution? then is the offence of the cross ceased. 12. [r] I would they were even cut off which trouble you.

Verses 1—12. Having established the doctrine which he undertook to prove, of free justification by faith alone, without the works of the law, he passes on to exhort them steadily to hold fast the truth. Stand fast, therefore, in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free from the curse of the law; and its obligation as a covenant of works, seeing for us he hath endured the one and fulfilled the other: and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage, and by submitting to circumcision, return to the Mosaical law, as obligatory, and necessary to salvation. Note, (1.) Every believer is Christ's freed-man, and hath nothing to fear from the law as denouncing a curse, and owes it no obedience as a covenant. (2.) The liberty of the gospel is not a liberty to sin, but to serve God, with freedom of Spirit and willing obedience. The apostle enforces his exhortation with several arguments.

1. Behold, I Paul say unto you, that if ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing. If you depend on this as essential to your justification before God, all Christ hath done and suffered will be of no avail to you, ver. 4. ye are fallen from grace, and excluded from all the blessings of that gospel, whose doctrines you once professed to hold. Note, The moment we pretend to join any thing of our own, any doings, duties, desires, or deserts, to Christ's finished work of atonement and righteousness, this is so high a contempt upon him, as must necessarily cut us off from all the blessings of that complete salvation which he hath wrought out, and of which he expects to have the entire glory.

2. Every man, who was circumcised, was obliged to perfect obedience to the law, under the penalty of the curse it denounces. For I testify again (so earnest am I that this important matter be clearly understood) to every man that is circumcised, that he is a debtor to keep the whole law; and having laid himself under such an obligation, must perish under the least failure, whilst he expects eternal life on the footing of his own obedience.

3. For even we, who are Jews, whose consciences have been enlightened to see the spiritual demands of the law, despairing of acceptance with God that way, do, through the Spirit, under his divine illumination and influence, wait for the hope of righteousness by faith, expecting earnestly and patiently that eternal life which God hath promised, not by the works of the law, but through faith in the righteousness of our great Redeemer, as our only sufficient title and availing plea: and if the Jews were thus necessitated to renounce all dependence on their circumcision, and the legal institutions under which they had been brought up, what folly would it be for Gentiles, who had never been subject to the law, to have recourse thereto? Note, Our hope towards God is founded on a better righteousness than our own, even on that of our divine Substitute and Surety.

4. The gospel hath cancelled all distinction of Jew and Gentile. For in Christ Jesus, and under that gracious dispensation which he hath introduced, neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision, as a recommendation to God's favour, but it is faith that worketh by love, that alone is available to salvation; faith, which lays our whole dependence on Christ alone, and from a confidence in his love, engages our souls in love to him, and in universal benevolence to mankind. Note, (1.) Christ is to the believer all in all. (2.) Faith justifies, not as a grace in us, but as it receives and embraces the divine righteousness provided in the gospel, and leads us to renounce every other hope. (3.) Wherever faith is unfeigned, the genuine fruits of love will spring from it, and hereby it shall be proved and evidenced.

5. It was the more grievous for them to depart from the faith, whose beginnings hath been so exceedingly promising. Ye did run well, who did hinder you from proceeding in the happy ways of the gospel, and hath diverted you from your course, that you should not obey the truth, which once you embraced? This persuasion cometh not of him that calleth you; these Judaizing sentiments I never taught you; and God, by his Spirit in the gospel, laid down a quite different method for your acceptance before him. Note, (1.) Many run well for a season, who afterwards falter in their heavenly course. (2.) It should be matter of serious inquiry to us, what hath turned us aside or retarded us in our Christian race? (3.) They who receive the truth in the light of it, must show their love of it also by the unfeigned obedience of their hearts thereunto.

6. The insinuation of such dangerous tenets was likely to produce the most fatal effects. A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump. Where once a departure from the principles of truth begins, like the plague it spreads through the whole body; and one corrupt member in the church may communicate the most fatal and pernicious heresies to the whole.

7. The apostle, notwithstanding the fears he could not but entertain, yet charitably expresses his confidence in many of them, that they would resist these innovations. I have confidence in you through the Lord, that you will be none otherwise minded, and cleave unshaken to the principles of the gospel: but he that troubleth you, (ὁ ταράσσων) the arch-heretic, and author of these pernicious opinions, shall bear his burden, and be laid under the just censures of the church, whosoever he be, however great and distinguished; at least the righteous judgment of God shall surely overtake him at the last.

8. He exculpates himself from every insinuation, which these seducers suggested, as if he himself was of their sentiments. And I, brethren, if I yet preach circumcision as necessary to salvation, which they would make you believe, why do I yet suffer persecution from the Jewish zealots, my most envenomed foes? then is the offence of the cross ceased: if this were the case, there would be no reason for them to be any longer exasperated with me. His sufferings therefore proved the zeal wherewith he opposed a notion so subversive of the fundamentals of Christianity.

9. He, with just indignation, expresses his earnest wish, that these troublers of the church's peace had their deserts. I would they were even cut off that trouble you, excommunicated from the society of the faithful, or silenced by the righteous vengeance of God. Note, The troublers of the church's peace, who broach their destructive opinions, sow dissensions, and promote schisms in the undivided body of Christ, shall be severally dealt with in the day of recompense.

13. For, brethren, [s] ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another. 14. For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this; [t] Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. 15. [u] But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another.

Verses 13—15. As the apostle had before exhorted them to hold fast their liberty, he here teaches them wherein that liberty consisted. For, brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, as if you were discharged from every moral obligation, and might gratify the corrupt desires of the flesh and of the mind; but the gospel of grace teaches us a different lesson, and engages us, by the most powerful principle, even by love, to serve one another, in every instance of brotherly affection seeking to promote each other's spiritual, temporal, and eternal interests. For all the law is fulfilled in one word, all the precepts of the second table are summed up in one, even in this; Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. But if ye bite and devour one another, disputing, reviling, and with fierce contentions, like savage beasts exasperated against each other, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another, and, forsaken of God, be given up to the evil of your own hearts, which must end in your ruin. Note, Nothing tends to the destruction of Christianity so immediately as dissensions among those who bear the Christian name.

16. This I say then, [x] Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil † the lust of the flesh. 17. [y] For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other: so that ye cannot do the things that ye would. 18. [z] But if ye be led by the Spirit, ye are not under the law. 19. [a] Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these; Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, 20. Idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, 21. Verses 16—26, The advice which St Paul upon the whole gives is this,

1. In general, This I say then, Walk in the Spirit, under his blessed influence, dictates, and guidance, according to the gospel word, and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh, be given up to the native corruptions of your heart, and so finish and perfect sin, (τελεσητε) as to become absolute slaves to it, and to perish under its reigning dominion. In this imperfect state, indeed, you will not be free from the warrings of indwelling evil; for these are two contending principles in every believer's heart, corruption and grace; the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, craving indulgence and gratification, and the Spirit against the flesh, opposing and mortifying its corrupt desires, and these are contrary the one to the other, in their nature, actings, and tendencies; so that ye cannot do, or ye do not, the things that ye would; the workings of the old man are checked and restrained by the power of divine grace, and though the propensity to evil remains in the regenerate, he is enabled by the nobler and divine nature, which he hath received, to oppose his carnal will and affections, though the conflict is often sharp, and sometimes corruption may prevail. But if ye be led by the Spirit, habitually under his influence, ye are not under the law, its condemnation is no longer to be apprehended, nor are ye subject to it as a covenant of works, but brought into the glorious liberty of the sons of God.

2. He particularly enumerates those works of the flesh which must be avoided, and those gracious fruits of the Spirit which should be produced by them. Now,

1. The works of the flesh, of the corrupt nature which is in fallen man, are manifest, which are these, adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, with every act of bodily pollution, or mental impurity. Also, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, which more immediately are the iniquities of the carnal mind. Add to these the deadly crimes of murder, drunkenness, revellings, and such like debaucheries and abominations, of the which I tell you before the day of vengeance comes, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things, unless they repent, shall not inherit the kingdom of God. Reader, mark these awful words, so express, so full, so distinct. Examine thyself; are either of these things found, allowed, indulged in thy heart or conduct? Then assuredly the wrath of God abideth on thee. But,

2. The fruit of the Spirit, which he produces in the souls of the redeemed, is love to God and men, joy in the Lord through Jesus Christ, in his people who live to his glory, in his ordinances, now become our delight; peace of conscience, and with all mankind; long-suffering, under all afflictive providences, or the provocations of the perverse; gentleness of temper and manners towards every creature; goodness that makes us ready to every word and work for the benefit of others; faith and truth in all our promises, engagements, and dealings; meekness, that is not easily provoked, and is instantly pacified: temperance in all our desires, and in the use of every earthly enjoyment: against such dispositions, and those who are possessed of them, there is no law, nor any condemnation to be apprehended.

3. They that are Christ's, in reality living members of his body mystical, will give demonstrative proof of the truth of their profession by their spiritual practice, for they have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts. Their old man is nailed to their Redeemer's cross, and though not utterly dead, yet is dying daily, till, with the death of the body, the body of sin shall be utterly abolished, and buried with the corpse never to rise up again. And whilst we are here in a state of warfare, if we live in the Spirit, actuated and influenced by his mighty energy, let us also walk in the Spirit, and act according to our profession as believers, and the obligations we are under to die daily unto sin, and to live unto righteousness. Let us not be desirous of vain glory, puffed up with a high conceit of our attainments or performances, and affecting human approbation; provoking one another by a proud superciliousness, or envying one another for their superior gifts; tempers the most opposite and contradictory to the profession of Christianity. Note, (1.) All who are truly Christ's evidence it by their conduct; the same mind in a measure is in them, and they follow his steps: if we say we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie. (2.) Only from pride cometh contention, envy, and every evil work; this must therefore be mortified, or we cannot be saved.

CHAP. VI.—ANNO DOMINI, 58.

This chapter chiefly consists of two parts: In the former the apostle gives us several plain and practical directions, which more especially tend to instruct Christians in their duty to one another, and to promote the communion of saints in love, from ver. 1. to ver. 10. In the latter he revives the main design of the epistle, which was to fortify the Galatians against the arts of their Judaizing teachers, and confirm them in the truth and liberty of the gospel: To which purpose he, 1. Gives them the true character of these teachers, and shows them from what motives, and with what views they acted, from ver. 10. to ver. 14. And, 2. On the other hand he acquaints them with his own temper and behaviour: from both which they might easily see how little reason they had to slight him, to fall in with them. And then he concludes the epistle with a solemn benediction.

1. BRETHREN, * if a man be [a] overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted. 2. [b] Bear ye one another's burdens, and so [c] fulfil the law of Christ. 3. [e] For if a man think himself to be something, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself. 4. But [e] let every man prove his own work, and then shall he [f] have rejoicing in himself alone, and not in another. 5. For [g] every man shall bear his own burden. 6. [h] Let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things. 7. [i] Be not deceived; God is not mocked: [k] for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. 8. Verses 1—10. As he had so warmly recommended to them that love, which would engage them to serve one another, he passes on to the exercise of it in several instances.

1. Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, through surprise, temptation, and human frailty, ye which are spiritual, and strong in the grace which is in Jesus Christ, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness, with all the tenderness that an able surgeon handles a dislocated joint, in order to reduce it; using, not rough reproaches, but tender expostulations; considering thyself, as no man is secure, lest thou also be tempted, and suffered to fall, to punish the undue severity you may have used towards others, and justly to smart under the same scourge. Note, (1.) A sense of our own weakness will make us compassionate towards an offending brother. (2.) Peculiar tenderness is needful, when the soul is already vexed and grieved by sin, lest we drive those to despair, whom we should lead to repentance. (3.) Angry reproofs, however great the provocation may be, never can do good.

2. Bear ye one another's burdens, sympathizing with the afflicted; patient with the infirmities of the weak; and desirous to alleviate every grief, under which your brethren groan, by your prayers, your counsel, or your substance; and so fulfil the law of Christ, that law of love, which he hath taught both by precept and example.

3. In humility, every man should watch over and examine himself. For if a man think himself to be something extraordinary, and self-sufficient to withstand every temptation, when in fact he is nothing, and hath no strength of his own, he deceiveth his own self, as he will find, by dire experience, when he comes to be tried. But let every man prove his own work, examining into his principles and practice according to the gospel rule, and then, if he finds a happy correspondence between them, shall he have rejoicing in himself, and not in another; he will exult in the blessed testimony of the Spirit and his own conscience, ascribing to the grace of God what had been wrought in him; and will seek no glory from human applause, nor desire to rake up others' faults as a foil to set off his own excellences; satisfied if God in Christ Jesus accepts and approves his services. For every man shall bear his own burden, and stand or fall, not according to the opinion he hath entertained of himself, or that others form of him, but according to the decision of the eternal Judge. Note, (1.) A high opinion of ourselves ever argues great ignorance of our own hearts. (2.) The testimony of a good conscience is matter of solid satisfaction. (3.) Though we know nothing declaredly evil in ourselves, we must remember he that judgeth us is the Lord, who sees many evils, which we through blindness overlook; and therefore it becomes us ever to be humble before him.

4. Let him that is taught in the word, communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things, contributing liberally and cheerfully to the support of a gospel ministry, for the labourer is worthy of his hire. Be not deceived by your deluding teachers, who would engross your regard, nor by the covetousness of your own hearts, that would divert you from this or any other instance of liberality; God is not to be mocked by vain pretences; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap, according to his work will be his wages. For he that soweth to the flesh, making provision for it to fulfil the lusts thereof, or inordinately anxious to hoard up worldly wealth, to the defrauding of God's altar or the poor, such a man shall of the flesh reap corruption; his perishing acquisitions will soon be fled, and endless misery succeed; but he that soweth to the Spirit, in every instance of bounty and benevolence, under the Spirit's guidance, laying out himself, his time, his talents, for the glory of Christ, and the good of his people, shall of the Spirit reap everlasting life, and in eternity receive the blessed recompense of his deeds. And let us not be weary in well-doing, though we may not see all the happy effects we expected, for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not. Nothing can be lost which is employed in God's service: though, like the seed under the clod, it may seem to be buried for a while, it will surely spring up and afford a plenteous increase, often in this world, and always in a better.

5. This is the day for labour, therefore we should diligently improve it. And as we have opportunity, let us, according to our abilities, do good unto all men, with liberal hearts, and open hands, not restraining our charity to any party or nation, though especially exercising it unto them who are of the household of faith, for whom we are bound particularly to interest ourselves, by peculiar ties of love and duty, as children of the same family, and heirs of the same inheritance.

But God forbid that [r] I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by † whom the world [s] is crucified unto me, and I unto the world. 15. Verses 11—18. Though in his other epistles he usually employed an amanuensis, out of his great affection to them he wrote this long letter on so important a subject with his own hand. And now, being about to conclude, he,

1. Marks out to them the true character of their seducing teachers, that they may beware of them. As many as desire to make a fair shew in the flesh, and by their pompous professions, and zeal for the ceremonials of religion, would insinuate into your confidence, they constrain you to be circumcised, and urge this upon you as necessary to salvation; when in fact, their design is not your good, but their own ease and honour; for they do it only lest they should suffer persecution for the cross of Christ, from the furious zealots for Judaism, who cannot bear the doctrine of free justification through faith in Christ alone, without circumcision, or the works of the law; for eager as they are for your submitting to this rite, neither they themselves who are circumcised, keep the law in its moral purity and perfection, rigidly as they are attached to the ceremonials of it; but they desire to have you circumcised, that they may glory in your flesh, and make a merit of it with their countrymen that you are their proselytes to circumcision. Note, (1.) They who are ashamed of the cross, are assuredly the enemies of Christ. (2.) Many make their boast of the form of religion, who are the greatest strangers to the power of it.

2. He declares to them his own temper and conduct. What the false teachers were ashamed of, he gloried in: God forbid that I should glory in external privileges, attainments, gifts, duties, or any thing else, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, and in that atoning sacrifice which he there offered, as my whole dependence for pardon and acceptance with God; by whom also the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world; through faith in him I am mortified to all its allurements, honours, and interests, and content to be treated with that contempt and virulent enmity which for the truth's sake I suffer from a world that lieth in wickedness. Note, (1.) The cross is the glorious object ever in the Christian's eye; for to the sacrifice there offered he is indebted for all his hopes in time and eternity. (2.) Faith in a crucified Jesus is the victory that overcometh the world, and nothing else can enable us to do it.

3. He lays down the essential point of true Christianity. For in Christ Jesus, with regard to the salvation which is in him, neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision; the one is no advantage, the other no obstruction; but that which must prove our interest in Christ, and that we are partakers of the grace of God in truth, is our becoming a new creature, having our principles, tempers, and conduct, cast into the mould of the gospel, through the mighty energy of faith which worketh by love.

4. He offers up his prayers for those who held fast the truth. As many as walk according to this rule, laid down in this epistle, with regard to justification by faith, and the new creature, without respect to circumcision or uncircumcision, peace be upon them and mercy, and upon the Israel of God; may they enjoy peace with God and in their own consciences, and every divine mercy which is purchased by the crucified Jesus for his redeemed people, who, whether Jews or Gentiles, are God's spiritual Israel.

5. He with authority enjoins them to give him no farther trouble on this point, but to submit to the apostolic warnings and reproofs. From henceforth let no man trouble me with farther disputes and contentions, or with injurious reproaches, as though I had ever countenanced the doctrine of these Judaizing teachers; the contrary of which is most evident: I have ever opposed them, and severely suffered for it; for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus, the scars of the wounds and stripes endured for his sake, the signs of my conformity to him, and of my adherence to the offensive doctrines of his cross, and particularly of justification by faith alone. Note, It is a proof we believe the doctrines we preach, when we dare boldly suffer for them, and can produce the glorious scars received in the service of the captain of our salvation.

6. He concludes with his usual benediction. Brethren, the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit. Amen! The treatment he had received from them did not quench his love towards them. Earnest to promote their salvation, he prays that they may experience the inestimably precious love of a dying Redeemer, and partake of all the invaluable privileges which he freely bestows on his chosen, even pardon, peace, comfort, holiness, and eternal life.

A PRACTICAL COMMENT

UPON THE

EPISTLE OF ST PAUL

TO THE EPHESIANS.

Introduction.

THIS epistle bears date out of a prison: and some have observed that what this apostle wrote when he was a prisoner had the greatest relish and savour in it of the things of God. When his tribulations did abound, his consolations and experiences did much more abound. From whence we may observe, that the afflictive exercises of God's people, and particularly of his ministers, do oftentimes tend to the advantage of others as well as their own.

The apostle's design is to settle and establish the Ephesians in the truth: and further to acquaint them with the mystery of the gospel in order to it. In the former part he represents the great privileges of the Ephesians, who, being in time past idolatrous heathens, were now converted to Christianity, and received into covenant with God, which he illustrates from a view of their deplorable state before their conversion, chap. i, ii, iii. In the latter part (which we have in the fourth, fifth, and sixth chapters) he instructs them in the principal duties of religion, both personal and relative; and exhorts and quickens them to the faithful discharge of them. Zanchius observes, that we have here an epitome of the whole Christian doctrine, and of almost all the chief heads of divinity.

Ephesus was the chief city of the proconsular Asia, and particularly famous for the magnificent temple of Diana. Idolatry there reigned triumphant, till the standard of Christ was erected, the pillars of Satan's kingdom shaken, and multitudes brought by the preaching of Paul to the obedience of the faith.

Verses 1, 2. The epistle opens with the apostle's usual address.

Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ, appointed to this high office and honour by the will of God immediately revealed from heaven, to the saints which are at Ephesus, by profession and practice separated from this present evil world, and sanctified by the Holy Ghost; and to the faithful in Christ Jesus, who by faith are united to him, and approve their fidelity before him: Grace be to you, and peace, in all their comprehensive import, from God our Father, the foundation of blessedness; and from the Lord Jesus Christ, the purchaser and bestower of every good and perfect gift. Note, (1.) All true Christians are saints upon earth. (2.) They who have obtained grace to be faithful have need still to look to the same fountain from whence they derive continual supplies, that their stability may be secured, and their peace be enlarged.

3. [d] Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who [e] hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly * places in Christ. 4. According as he [f] hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love: 5. [g] Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will; 6. [h] To the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath [i] made us accepted in [k] the Beloved. 7. [l] In whom we have redemption through his blood, the [m] forgiveness of sins, according to the [n] riches of his grace: 8. [o] Wherein he hath abounded toward us in all wisdom and prudence; 9. [p] Having made known unto us the mystery of his will, [q] according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself: 10. That [r] in the dispensation of the fulness of times, he might [s] gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in † heaven, and which are on earth; even in him: 11. [t] In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who [u] worketh all things after the counsel of his own will: 12. [x] That we should be to the praise of his glory, who [y] first trusted in Christ. 13. [z] In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, [a] the gospel of your salvation: in whom also, after that ye believed, [b] ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, 14. Which is the [c] earnest of our inheritance until the [d] redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory.

Verses 3—14. Deeply impressed with a sense of the inestimable blessings of which in Christ Jesus they had been made partakers, the grateful apostle breaks forth in praises and thanksgivings to the God of all grace.

1. In general. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the adored Redeemer, in whom he is now become our reconciled and covenant God, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly things or places in Christ, blessings descending from above, and leading up our souls to high and heavenly things, till we reach the mansions of eternal blessedness. And for all these rich gifts which we now enjoy, and all the greater glory, which we hope for, be everlasting praise, honour, and thanksgiving ascribed to the ever blessed fountain of mercies. Note, (1.) We cannot bless God as he blesseth us; his blessings are real gifts conferred; ours are only the grateful acknowledgments we owe for them. (2.) In Christ Jesus all spiritual blessings are freely given to us; and though we are not in possession of them all, our title to them is sure.

1. In particular,

(1.) He praises God for the spiritual blessing of election. Ac- cording as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, in his own eternal mind having sovereignly fixed upon us as the objects of his love, not for any thing foreseen in us, but as regarded in Christ, our covenant-head and representative, who is most eminently his elect, and in and with whom he hath predestinated us to life and salvation; and, as the way thereto, hath ordained, that we should be holy, and without blame before him in love, sanctified by his Spirit, in sincerity and truth enabled to approve ourselves before him, as acting under the influence of that divine principle of love which he hath shed abroad in our heart; having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ unto himself; from everlasting, in his eternal purpose, singling us out from the rest of mankind, and, through union with his own Son, admitting us to the high dignity of children, bestowing on us the Spirit of adoption, and designing us for the eternal inheritance, that we might be thus a people for his praise; according to the good pleasure of his will, not for any worthiness foreseen in us, or any previous obligation lying upon him so to do, but merely out of his own divine sovereignty, that we might be to the praise of the glory of his grace, which is thus magnified in the highest, and all the glory of a complete and finished salvation, from the beginning to the end, to be ascribed to him alone by every redeemed soul.

(2.) He blesses God for the reconciliation and acceptance obtained through Christ Jesus. Wherein he hath made us accepted in the Beloved, in his boundless grace he hath taken us for his own, and, regarding us as we stand united with his dear Son, embraces us with the arms of his everlasting love, accepting both our persons and services for his sake, in whom being found, we are esteemed complete and perfect, lacking nothing.

(3.) He praises God for the great and inestimable blessings of redemption and remission of sins through the adored Saviour. In whom we have redemption, an entire deliverance from all evil, and a restoration to all blessedness, in virtue of the inestimable price which he hath paid, through his most precious blood, shed on purpose to satisfy divine justice, and obtain our deliverance from the curse of a broken law, in virtue whereof we have the forgiveness of sins, and are saved from all their deadly consequences in time and eternity, according to the riches of his grace; though it was due to our Substitute, the pardon is absolutely free to us; and that such a Redeemer should be ever provided was itself a matter of the most transcendent grace and favour; wherein he hath abounded towards us in all wisdom and prudence, manifesting the most astonishing depths of wisdom in the contrivance, and prudence in the execution of this wondrous scheme of salvation.

(4.) He blesses God for the knowledge he had communicated to them of his will. Having made known unto us the mystery of his will, which was hid from former ages, or but darkly made known, but now is revealed to us, both by an external revelation of it clearly in his word, and by the internal illumination of his Spirit, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself, flowing from his own sovereign determination, without the least inducement whatever thereunto moving him in those who are the objects of his choice; that in the dispensation of the fulness of times under the gospel, the last dispensation of grace which will be vouchsafed to the sinful sons of men, he might gather together in one all things in Christ, reducing things again to order from the confusion which sin had introduced, recovering his elect, whether Jews or Gentiles, from the miseries of their fallen state, and under Christ as their living head, uniting them in one body; both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, angels as well as saints being formed into one glorious company; even in him, who is their centre of union, whom they acknowledge as their common Lord, and alike owe to him their stability and eternal blessedness.

(5.) He blesses God for the glorious inheritance obtained for them in Christ. In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, holding a title to eternal life on his complete obedience to death, and virtually possessed of it through him who, as our forerunner, is for us entered into heaven itself; being predestinated to this glorious portion, according to the purpose of him who worketh all things with irresistible efficacy (ενεργουντος) after the counsel of his own will, that we, to whom the word was first preached, should be to the praise of his glory, who first trusted in Christ, and embraced his gospel. In whom ye Gentiles, also trusted, and obtained a like inheritance with us, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation, and became thereby obedient to the faith, and partakers in common of all our blessings.

(6.) He blessed God for the seal and assurance which they had received of their interest in the everlasting promises. In whom also, after that ye believed, ye were sealed up with that Holy Spirit of promise, which, shining on his own work, conveyed the fullest evidence to your consciences of your particular interest in the salvation of the gospel, which is the earnest of our inheritance, a pledge and foretaste of the glory which shall be revealed, until the redemption of the purchased possession, when we, whom he purchased with his own blood, shall be brought to the perfection of holiness and happiness above, and the work be completed in the resurrection of a glorified body at the last day, unto the praise of his glory, when to eternity his great name shall be exalted by all the redeemed that shall surround his throne with never-ending praises.

15. Wherefore [c] I also, after I heard of your faith in the Lord Jesus, and love unto all the saints, 16. Cease not to give thanks for you, making mention of you in my prayers; 17. That [f] the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you [g] the spirit of wisdom and revelation ‡ in the knowledge of him: 18. [h] The eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is [i] the hope of his calling, and what [k] the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints, 19. And what is [l] the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe, according to the working ‖ of his mighty power, 20. [m] Which he wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places, 21. [n] Far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in [o] that which is to come; 22. And [p] hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be [q] the head over all things to the church, 23. Which is [r] his body, the fulness of him that [s] filleth all in all.

Verses 15—23. The apostle accompanies his grateful thanksgivings with his affectionate prayers. Wherefore I also, after I heard of your faith in the Lord Jesus, and love unto all the saints, shown by the most genuine proofs, cease not to give thanks for you at every approach to the throne of grace, making mention of you in my prayers, that the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, and our covenant God in him, the Father of glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him, making a more clear and experimental discovery to you of the glorious truths of his word, and manifesting with greater energy his love to your souls, that you may know, choose, and delight in him as your God, the eyes of your understanding, which by nature were darkened, being now enlightened that ye may know, (1.) What is the hope of his calling, assured with the utmost certainty of the solid foundation on which it is built, and seeing the unutterably glorious privileges which it comprehends. And, (2.) What the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints, at present in all the inestimably precious gifts and graces which he bestows, and hereafter in the complete and everlasting blessedness which he hath provided for them. (3.) And what the exceeding greatness of his mighty power, to us-ward who believe, how surpassing marvellous, that we, who were dead in sins, should ever be quickened to the life of faith and grace, preserved amidst all the enemies, spiritual and temporal, without and within, which fight against us, and our bodies at last raised from the dust in glory, according to the working of his mighty power, an act of omnipotence no less than that which he wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead, leading captivity captive, and set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places, triumphant over all his foes, and exalted to the throne of Majesty on high, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come, whether angels of light, or demons of darkness, or earthly potentates and princes, by whatever name or title distinguished, all are made subject unto him; and hath put all things under his feet, as the exalted Mediator, and gave him to be head over all things to the church; to govern, protect, and preserve it from all foes, and so to order every event, as that in its issue it shall conduce to the spiritual and eternal benefit of the whole and every individual believer; whilst he, as their living head of vital influence, actuates, quickens, and strengthens every member of his church, which is his body mystical, and in that sense they are the fulness of him; for if the least member were wanting, the body would be incomplete; though in himself Christ is infinitely perfect, and needeth us not, whilst we receive our all out of him that filleth all in all, supplying every want of his people, and bestowing on them the abundance of his grace, that they may grow up into him in all things, and be conformed to him their head. Note, (1.) Prayer is the constant duty we owe to each other. (2.) The prospect of the glorious inheritance before us should quicken our desires after it. (3.) Every believer is as much an instance of omnipotent power, as if a dead body were raised from the dust. (4.) Christ hath all power committed to him for the good of his people, and they may be confident of his care and support in every time of need, nor shall any be able to pluck the meanest of his people out of his hands.

* Or the wills.

Verses 1—3. Behold the miserable state of every man by nature.

1. We are dead in trespasses and sins; spiritually dead, as criminals under the curse and condemnation of a broken law, and the life of God extinguished in our souls; and in this state of desperate misery we must for ever continue, till redeemed by the blood, and quickened by the Spirit of the Lord Jesus.

2. Though dead to God, we have been but too much alive to the practice of sin; in which in time past we walked according to the course of this world; our spirit apostate, our ways perverse, conformed to the maxims, and copying the manners of a world that lieth in wickedness, the consequence of which could not but be our condemnation with the world.

3. We were at that time the bond-slaves of the god of this world; acting according to the instigation of the prince of the power of the air, the devil, who with his legions is permitted to exercise sometimes his power and agency in the aerial regions, and is the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience by himself, and those foul fiends his fellows, tempting, seducing, governing, hardening the unbelieving and disobedient. Among whom also we all, Jews as well as Gentiles, even apostles as well as others, had our conversation in time past, enslaved by sin, and led captive by the devil at his will; a state how fearful!

4. We then lived in the lusts of our flesh, indulging every corrupt appetite, and fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind, as the beasts which perish; devoted to the gratification of brutal passions, and in our souls filled with pride, envy, malice, hatred, revenge, and the whole train of spiritual wickednesses; disposed to every abomination, and only wanting temptation and opportunity to commit every iniquity in which body or soul can be engaged.

5. As the source of all our evil, we are by nature children of wrath, obnoxious to the displeasure of that God who is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity; born with every evil propensity; and herein there is no difference even between the elect of God and others, all lying in the same corrupted mass, till separated by sovereign grace. The more we are acquainted with this our natural state of desperate corruption, remediless guilt, and hopeless misery, the more we shall value the unsearchable riches of Christ, and be filled with admiration, love, and praise, in the view of an incarnate Redeemer.

4. But God, who is [f] rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, 5. [g] Even when we were dead in sins, [h] hath quickened us together with Christ, (by grace ye are saved;) 6. And [i] hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus: 7. That in the ages to come [k] he might shew the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus. 8. Verses 4—13. With exultation and wonder should we contemplate the astonishing mystery of redeeming love. Here in its brightest glories we see it displayed, and God in that delightful attribute of mercy appears exalted in the highest.

1. The original cause of our redemption is God's eternal love and grace who is rich in mercy, the source inexhaustible of all our blessings; not for any thing done by us, or foreseen in us, but purely to magnify his own great love wherewith he loved us before the worlds were, having fixed upon us sovereignly as the objects of his choice, and predestinated us to grace in time, and glory in eternity.

2. What serves as a foil to set off in the most distinguished lustre this mercy of our God, is the state in which we lay, even when we were dead in trespasses and in sins; and, instead of any thing to engage his love, had in us every thing to excite his loathing: even then, when we were foul, odious, and in a condition desperate as that of the fallen angels, did the God of all grace regard us, and plucked us as brands from the burning. Praise the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits.

3. The inestimable blessings conferred upon such wretched sinners are, [1.] Life in Christ our living head. He hath quickened us together with Christ: forasmuch as in his resurrection we see the sentence of death passed on our nature repealed, and the life which he possesses is for the use of his body mystical, who, as considered in him, are alive before God, and by virtue of our union with him will in due time be raised to spiritual life, and conformed to the image of their living Lord. By grace ye are saved, and thus through the transcendently rich and sovereign love of God, restored to his favour here, and receive a sure title to his glory hereafter. [2.] He hath also raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus: for since he, as our forerunner and representative, is for us entered into the heavenly glory; we, as virtually included in him, may be said to be there also, and are thereby assured we shall in due time actually possess the same inheritance, and reign with him for ever. May our affections then be ever placed above with our exalted head.

4. The end God proposes in this great salvation. That in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace, in his kindness towards us, through Jesus Christ; encouraging to the latest days of time poor and perishing sinners to come and trust in this boundless mercy revealed in the gospel; and that in the better world, when all the glory of his grace in brightest colours shall appear, he might be the object of ceaseless praise and adoration to men and angels through all the countless ages of eternity.

5. The means appointed to convey all these blessings to us is faith. For by grace ye are saved, freely, fully, everlastingly, through faith, which is the way wherein we receive all the great and precious promises; and that not of yourselves, faith being not the produce of our own free-will, nor the effect of others' reasoning; but it is the gift of God, and like all other blessings, flows from his boundless love, and is the work of his Spirit in our hearts; and both the salvation itself, and the faith which embraces it, are bestowed without the least respect to any works of ours, that the glory of the divine grace might not suffer the least diminution. Not of works, lest any man should boast; for could one fallen creature produce the least thought or action, which would give him a superiority over others, and recommend him to the divine favour, as a more worthy object than they, the salvation would be no more of grace, and the sinner might justly glory.

6. Though our salvation be purely of grace, God hath taken care to engage our hearts to himself by the strongest ties, whilst all the work and all the glory appear to be his own. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus; all that is excellent in us comes from his mere gift; our souls, by divine operation renewed, now produce the genuine fruits of righteousness; he works all that is good in us, and, though he excludes our glorying, secures our obedience unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them; such being his eternal purpose, and he hath prepared (προητοιμασεν) disposed us and enabled us to the practice of them. Note, The doctrines of grace, far from loosening, as some vainly imagine, the obligations to morality, can only effectually engage and enable the soul for the practice of righteousness and true holiness.

7. He reminds the Ephesians of what they should ever keep warm upon their memories, to awaken their gratitude, and bind their hearts to God. Wherefore remember, that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh, who are called Uncircumcision by that which is called the Circumcision in the flesh made with hands; treated by the native Jews with contempt and disdain, and indeed excluded from all the peculiar privileges which they enjoyed: that at that time ye were without Christ, having neither knowledge of him nor union with him; being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, out of the pale of God's church, and strangers from the covenants of promise, which were peculiarly confirmed to Abraham's natural seed; having no hope, at least no well grounded one, of God's favour and life eternal; and without God in the world, atheists both speculative and practical; even whilst you worshipped gods many, being without the least knowledge of the one true Jehovah. But now in Christ Jesus, since by faith ye have been united to him, and heard and embraced his gospel, ye who sometimes were far off from all good, and all hope, are made nigh by the blood of Christ, received into a state of favour and reconciliation with God, and entitled to the eternal blessedness which he hath purchased. Note, Sinners in their natural state are far removed from God, and must, but for the redemption which is in Jesus Christ, remain so for ever.

14. For he is [t] our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the [u] middle wall of partition between us; 15. [x] Having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain [y] one new man, so making peace; 16. Verses 14—22. All the blessings in time and eternity, which sinners can ever hope for, flow down to them through the channel of a crucified Jesus. For he is our peace, having reconciled us to God by his own blood, who hath made both one, uniting Jews and Gentiles together in one body under himself our common head, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us, which till now excluded the nations from the blessings peculiar to Israel; having abolished in his flesh the enmity, that which had been the cause of much enmity between Jews and Gentiles, even the ceremonial law, called the law of commandments contained in ordinances, which, as they pointed all to Christ, were now fulfilled by him, and abrogated, he designing for to make of twain, of Jews and Gentiles, one new man, cementing them together in one church, and forming his own blessed image alike in their hearts; so making peace, between them, as members of one body, united by faith and love in him; and that he might reconcile both unto God, who by nature and practice were alike estranged from him, and must have perished together, but for the same atoning blood which he shed in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby, sin, the cause of enmity between God and the sinner, being removed, and the ceremonial law, the great cause of variance between Jews and Gentiles, being abolished; and came and preached peace, by his divinely constituted ministers, to you, Gentiles, which were afar off, inviting you, who were at the greatest distance from his church, to come and find pardon and peace with God; and the like message he sent to them that were nigh, to the Jewish people, who needed the same gracious salvation, and could only through a Redeemer be saved from the curses of a broken law; for through him we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father; the same spirit of adoption being shed abroad in both our hearts; the same advocate standing to plead for us; the same gracious God appearing as the Father of mercies, and ready alike to hear and answer our petitions. Now therefore ye Gentiles are no more strangers and foreigners, as before, but fellow-citizens with the saints, partaking of the same privileges, and of the household of God, entitled to the same inheritance; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, who both concurred in the same testimony, leading the souls of sinners to Jesus Christ himself, as being the chief corner-stone, on whom alone they could safely build for eternity; in whom all the building fitly framed together, of Jews and Gentiles, groweth into a holy temple in the Lord, daily accessions of converts being made to it; a temple infinitely more glorious than that of Solomon's; a living temple, where the Lord peculiarly dwells, as in his own house; in whom you also are builded together, and compose part of the glorious fabric, that ye might be for a habitation of God through the Spirit, who takes up his blessed abode among you, and in your hearts, until ye shall come to the perfect enjoyment of him for ever in heaven. Note, (1.) There is but one safe foundation on which a sinful soul can build, and that is Jesus Christ. (2.) They who are truly grounded on him shall never fail, but be growing, by the mighty agency of his indwelling Spirit, more holy and happy, till they arrive at the perfection of blessedness in glory everlasting.

CHAP. III.—ANNO DOMINI, 64.

This chapter consists of two parts. 1. Of the account which St Paul gives the Ephesians concerning himself, as he was appointed by God to be the apostle of the Gentiles, ver. 1—13. 2. Of his devout and affectionate prayer to God for the Ephesians, ver. 14—21. We may observe it to have been very much the practice of this apostle to intermix, with his instructions and counsels, intercessions and prayers to God for those to whom he wrote, as knowing that all his instructions and teachings would be useless and vain, except God did render them effectual. This is an example that all the ministers of Christ should copy after, praying earnestly that the efficacious operations of the Divine Spirit may attend their ministrations, and crown them with success.

Verses 1—13. The apostle gives his beloved Ephesians an account of his sufferings for the truths which here he had asserted. For this cause, because I declare the privileges to which the Gentiles, in common with the Jews, are admitted through the gospel, I Paul am the prisoner of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles; and those are honourable bonds which in his service are laid upon us: if, or since, ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God, which is given me to you-ward, as especially commissioned and sent to preach the gospel to the Gentiles; and how that by revelation he made known unto me the mystery of his gospel, as a common salvation for men of all nations, (as I wrote afore in this epistle, in a few words, whereby when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ, and how fully and clearly he hath acquainted me with his gracious designs,) which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, the Gentile world being left in utter ignorance, and those to whom the light of truth was revealed in types and prophecies, seeing but through a glass darkly, compared with the present clear dispensation of the gospel, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit, since the ascension of Jesus into the heavens, that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs with his Israel, and of the same body, incorporated in one church, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel, sharing in all the present and eternal blessedness of his redeemed people, equally with the Jews. Whereof I was made a minister, by a divine call and ordination not of men, nor by man, but immediately from Jesus Christ himself, according to the gift of the grace of God given unto me, appointing me to this office, and qualifying me for the discharge of it, by the effectual working of his power, enabling me for my work, and crowning it with success. Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, so exceeding lowly doth the great apostle speak of himself, and wants words sufficiently abasing to express the sense he entertained of his own unworthiness of so high an honour; even to me, vile as I am, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ: those treasures of grace and glory which reside in him for his people's use, that can never be fathomed, never be exhausted; a store that mocks computation, and in which we know neither where to begin nor where to end the wonderful account. And to make all men see, as far as my ministry should reach, what is the fellowship of the mystery, and how blessed is that communion of saints into which by the gospel they are admitted, even Gentiles as well as Jews, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, a secret lodged in his own eternal mind, who created all things by Jesus Christ, without whose co-efficient agency was not any thing made that was made. And the revelation of this mystery, which was so long concealed, is made known, to the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God, that fresh matter might thus be afforded to the angelic host for their contemplation, wonder and praise. And all this great salvation is completed, according to the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord, who was ordained to be the great agent in redemption, as he had been in creation: In whom we have boldness and access with confidence by the faith of him; faith, of which he is both the great author and object, whereby we can now approach the throne of grace with humble confidence, regarding God as our Father and Friend, and admitted into the most endeared fellowship with him. Wherefore, considering these inestimable blessings and privileges, I desire that ye faint not at my tribulations for you, or be disheartened or desponding at these sufferings, which are your glory, and should minister to you continual matter of rejoicing in the honour thus conferred on me, and in the confirmation given thereby to the gospel which you have received. Note, (1.) None can make gospel ministers but God only; they who run unsent, must return unblessed. (2.) The grace of God should be the grand subject of our ministrations, for to preach this are we sent. (3.) If we know the power of the gospel, we shall not be ashamed of that cross, which, for the sake of it, we shall be called to bear. (4.) The greatest Christians have the most lowly thoughts of themselves: their eyes being most enlightened, they discover more of their own imperfections and corruptions than others do. (5.) None can truly preach the unsearchable riches of Christ to others, who have not first experienced something of them in their own souls. (6.) They who by faith in a Redeemer behold a reconciled God, will delight to approach him, and to maintain constant communion with him.

14. For this cause [t] I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, 15. Of whom the [u] whole family in heaven and earth is named, 16. That he would grant you, [x] according to the riches of his glory, [y] to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; 17. [z] That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being [a] rooted and grounded in love, 18. May be able to [b] comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; 19. And to [c] know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with [d] all the fulness of God. 20. Now unto him that is [e] able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, 21. Unto him be [f] glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end. Amen.

Verses 14—21. The apostle informed us what was the subject of his preaching, and he failed not to water the seed sown with his fervent and importunate prayers. For this cause, that you may not faint, and that the gospel may be made effectual to you, I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and our Father in him, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named, both angels and men, saints on earth, and saints in heaven, who through their adored Saviour have obtained a more excellent title, as children of God, than that in which the carnal Jews boasted, as children of Abraham. Now the apostle prays for them,

1. That he would grant you according to the riches of his glory out of the abundance of his grace, and for his great name's sake, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man, to oppose all your spiritual foes, to resist every temptation, to bear up under all persecution, to discharge every duty and service for God's glory, and the good of immortal souls; and steadily and perseveringly to hold on your heavenly course, till your warfare shall end, and your victory be complete. Note, (1.) Spiritual blessings are the best of blessings, and most earnestly to be sought. (2.) All our strength cometh from above, and we may be confident, that the blessed Spirit who hath begun the good work, will perfect it even unto the end.

2. That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith, making your souls the place of his abode; blessing you with a sense of his nearness and special presence; and enabling you by faith to draw out of his fulness; that ye being rooted and grounded in love, fully persuaded of God's love in Christ towards you, experiencing the richest manifestations of it in your hearts, and cleaving to him with fixed attachment, as the tree that hath struck its roots deep into the earth, may be able to comprehend with all saints, to whom in bonds of fervent charity ye are united, what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge. Its fulness none, not even angels, can comprehend; but larger and more extensive views of this love than we have yet attained to, we cannot but desire, to behold its vast extent, as reaching to all nations and sinners of every degree; its duration from everlasting to everlasting: the depths of wretchedness in which we lay, and of sufferings to which for our sakes the Son of God incarnate submitted; and the transcendent heights of glory to which he himself is now exalted, and to which he hath engaged to bring us, that we may reign with him for ever and ever.

3. That ye may be filled with all the fulness of God; completely made partakers of a divine nature, and to the utmost capacity of your souls may be enriched with all that light, grace, peace, joy, and holiness, which God, as your covenant God, hath promised to his dearest children in this world; and may you come to the eternal enjoyment of him in a better, to dwell in God, and God in you.

4. He concludes with a doxology. Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, who counts nothing too great or too good to bestow on the children of his grace, and hath already given us the most encouraging experience of his power and grace; unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end; eternal blessings, praise, and adoration be rendered unto him for this astonishing redemption; and let every member of the church, in heaven or in earth, with holy rapture and joy, cry, Amen!

CHAP. IV.—ANNO DOMINI, 64.

Having laid down the glorious gospel privileges, the apostle proceeds to enforce the obligations thence resulting; for the doctrines of grace are the only powerful principles of true obedience. In this chapter we have divers exhortations to important duties. 1. One that is more general, ver. 1. 2. An exhortation to mutual love, unity, and concord, with the proper means and motives to promote them, ver. 2—16. 3. An exhortation to Christian purity and holiness of life; and that both more general, ver. 17—24. and in several particular instances, ver. 25. to the end.

1. I THERE-FORE, the [a] prisoner * of the Lord,) beseech you that ye [b] walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called; 2. [c] With all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love: 3. [d] Endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. 4. There is [e] one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in [f] one hope of your calling; 5. [g] One Lord, [h] one faith, [i] one baptism, 6. [h] One God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all. 7. But unto every one of us [l] is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ. 8.
Wherefore he saith, [m] When he ascended up on high, he led [n] captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. 9. (Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also [o] descended first into the lower parts of the earth? 10. He that descended is the same also that [p] ascended up far above all heavens, that he might † fill all things.) 11. [q] And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; 12. [r] For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the [s] body of Christ:
13. [t] Till we all come ‡ in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the ‖ stature of the fulness of Christ: 14. That we henceforth be no more [u] children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; 15. But, [x] * speaking the truth in love, [y] may grow up into him in all things, which is [z] the head, even Christ:
16. [a] From whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love.

Verses 1—16. The apostle addresses to them,

1. A general exhortation to walk worthy of their high vocation. I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, suffering now for my fidelity to his gospel, beseech you by every endearing argument, that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, adorning by your conversation the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things.

2. He particularly exhorts them, (1.) To behave with all lowliness and meekness; in humble thoughts of themselves, and the mildest deportment towards others, with long-suffering, passing by offences, and overlooking the infirmities of their brethren, forbearing one another in love, influenced by this divine principle, and patient towards all men. Note, True love, humility unfeigned, and approved meekness, are the most striking lineaments of the Christian's character. (2.) In this manner endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, sweetly cemented together in holy fellowship, and the whole church being in perfect peace, no jarring discord should disturb the happy union.

3. He suggests the strongest motives to the practice which he recommends. There is one body, of which we are all members; and one Spirit, which actuates the whole; and therefore we cannot, if this be the case, but have the tenderest concern for and closest union with each other; even as ye are called in one hope of your calling, looking for the same inheritance in glory, and expecting to spend a blessed eternity in your Father's house above. There is one Lord, the Saviour of his people, and to whom they all owe duty and allegiance; one faith, the same gospel, and to be apprehended in the same way; one baptism, the sacramental rite of admission into the kingdom of grace, wherein we are solemnly dedicated to Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; one God and Father of all, who stands in this endeared relation to all that are the children of grace by faith in Jesus Christ; who is above all, exalted above all blessing and praise; and through all, dispensing his mighty influences through the whole mystical body, and in you all, making your hearts his temple; and therefore, being connected by ties so many and so engaging, we should be most closely united together in love, and appear as actuated by one soul.

4. The different gifts and graces bestowed on the members of the same body, far from producing any variance, should cement them the nearer, as they are given for the benefit of the whole. But unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ, each member hath his several office and endowment; and according as the Lord sees fit, he dispenses sovereignly to every man the grace suited to his place and station. Wherefore he saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, triumphant over all his foes, having spoiled principalities and powers, and led Satan, sin, death, and hell, as vanquished enemies, bound to his chariot-wheels; and gave gifts unto men, the richest and most amazing gifts of his Spirit. Now that he ascended in this glorious manner what is it that is herein intimated to us, but that he also descended first from heaven into the lower parts of the earth, humbling himself to take the human nature into personal union with himself, and then to lie down in the grave, making atonement for our sins. He that descended is the same divine person, the son of God, who ascended above all heavens to the state of most transcendent dignity, enthroned in majesty on high, that he might fill all things, and abundantly dispense to every member of his church the gifts and graces needful for them. And he gave some apostles, to fill the highest stations in his church; and some prophets, by inspiration to foretell future events, and to expound the prophetic word; and some evangelists who were generally employed in preaching the word; and some pastors and teachers, to take care of particular churches, and minister unto them in holy things: all which appointments to these several offices are designed for the perfecting of the saints (καταρτισμον) to join them in firm union together, and carry on the work of grace begun in them to its perfection in glory; till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, by means of the same blessed gospel, and by happy experience of the power and grace of the same adored Jesus, unto a perfect man, growing up to higher spiritual attainments, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ, when we shall bear his image complete, and when all his elect members shall be collected into his eternal kingdom, and form that glorious body of which he is the head. That we henceforth be no more children, weak in faith and knowledge, and every grace, and consequently liable to be tossed to and fro and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness whereby they lie in wait to deceive, and by fair pretences seduce the simple and unwary into their pernicious heresies and destructive ways; but, speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ; which growth in grace the blessed gospel, through the power of Jesus, tends effectually to promote; from whom the whole body, fitly joined together as members to the living Head, and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, by that divine energy that is communicated from the life-giving Spirit of the Lord, maketh increase of the body, unto the edifying of itself in love, till it comes to perfect blessedness in the eternal world. Note, Truth from the heart should ever be spoken among Christians, and with that love that may gain it a more welcome reception.

17. [b] This I say therefore, and testify in the Lord, that [c] ye henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk, in the vanity of their mind, 18. [d] Having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them because of the † blindness of their heart: 19. [e] Who, being past feeling, have given themselves over unto lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness. 20. [f] But ye have not so learned Christ; 21. If so be that ye have heard him, and have been taught by him, [g] as the truth is in Jesus: 22. That ye [h] put off, concerning the former conversation, the old man which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts; 23. And [i] be renewed in the spirit of your mind; 24. And that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and ‡ true holiness. 25. Wherefore, [k] putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbour: for [l] we are members one of another. 26. [m] Be ye angry, and sin not: let not the sun go down upon your wrath: 27. [n] Neither give place to the devil. 28. [o] Let him that stole steal no more: but rather let him [p] labour, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have ‖ to give to him that needeth. 29. [q] Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good * to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers. 30. And [r] grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are [s] sealed unto the day of redemption. 31. [t] Let all bitterness and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice: 32. And [u] be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you.

Verses 17—32. Having recommended to them close union, he proceeds to inculcate purity of heart and life.

1. He warns them against the practices of the unconverted heathen. This I say therefore, and testify in the Lord, entreating and solemnly in his name enjoining it upon you as members of his undefiled body, that ye henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk, in their sinful, idolatrous, sensual courses, in the vanity of their mind, acting after the dictates of their vain and corrupted hearts: having the understanding darkened in all spiritual matters; alienated from the life of God, estranged from him who is the fountain of life, and averse to all his holy ways, through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their hearts, rejecting every means of instruction, wilfully perverse and obstinate against the notices of his will, and resisting the convictions of their own consciences, not liking to retain God in all their knowledge, Rom. i. 28. who being past feeling, their hearts impenetrably hardened in sin, have given themselves over unto lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness, abandoning themselves to every vile affection without restraint, and pursuing their guilty pleasures with insatiable desire.

2. Far otherwise was the lesson the gospel had taught them. But ye have not so learned Christ; since ye have known his grace, you have been directed to a different spirit and conduct; if so be or since that, ye have heard him, speaking in his word to your hearts, and have been taught by him through the illumination and powerful energy of his Spirit, as the truth is in Jesus, even that pure unadulterated gospel which Jesus taught by his own ministry, and exemplified in his temper and conversation, whose bright example his living members delight to imitate: that ye put off, concerning the former conversation, the old man, restraining and mortifying that body of sin which is born with you, and ever wars within you; which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts, lusts which promise much gratification in the indulgence, but fatally deceive the soul into endless perdition: and be renewed in the spirit of your mind yet more and more in knowledge, grace, and holiness: and that ye put on the new man, made partakers of a divine nature, and in spirit, temper, and conduct, quite changed from your former selves as if you had been really different persons; which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness, after his own image and by his own power. Wherefore, as those who are influenced by another spirit, beware of those sins to which ye were formerly addicted; particularly,

(1.) Putting away lying in every instance, speak every man truth with his neighbour, without deceit or prevarication, paying the strictest regard to your word at all times and in all circumstances, and preferring the endurance of the greatest evils to the suggestion of the least falsehood: for we are members one of another, and therefore bound to use all simplicity and fidelity in our conversation with each other. Note, An habitual liar is infallibly a child of wrath. All Christ's members desire ever to speak the truth from their heart.

(2.) Be ye angry and sin not; for all anger is not in its own nature evil: but as we are so prone, even where there is just cause to exceed in our resentments, we must check the rising displeasure, and repress its workings: therefore, whatever cause is given for it, let not the sun go down upon your wrath: but hasten to calm any tumult which may have arisen, that it fix not in hatred, or rankle into malice or revenge: neither give place to the devil, who ever seeks to irritate the irascible nature which is in us, and to blow our passions into a flame. Note, There is scarce a more besetting sin than anger, nor any against which we need be more habitually on our guard.

(3.) Let him that stole steal no more, utterly abhorring all such iniquitous practices; but rather let him labour, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth, and not only be saved from the temptation to dishonesty, whereunto idleness is the most direct road, but also be enabled by his honest industry to afford a pittance from his gains for the relief of the necessitous.

(4.) Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, nothing lewd, profane, opprobrious, light, which in its most distant tendency can lead to evil; but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers, and serve to promote their spiritual and eternal benefit. Note, Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh; and a Christian spirit will appear in readiness to introduce and maintain such conversation as is profitable and edifying.

(5.) And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, by these or any such like evils, lest you provoke him to withdraw his blessed influences from you: whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption, that glorious day when you shall be delivered from the burdens of the flesh, or when you shall rise again in glory to appear for ever in the presence of God. Lord, take not thy Holy Spirit from us!

(6.) Let all bitterness, all rancour of spirit and acrimony in discourse; and wrath, and clamour, and evil speaking, the fruits of a mind inflamed with passion and rage; be put away from you, with all malice: and be ye kind one to another, gentle, courteous, affectionate; tender hearted, sympathizing and full of pity towards the afflicted and the tempted; forgiving one another every provocation and injury, however great or aggravated, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you, freely, fully, and for ever. Note, (1.) A sense how much we are ourselves indebted to the pardoning love of God, will engage us to exercise the like forgiveness to our brethren. (2.) A tongue that is set on fire of hell, and full of bitterness, &c. hath never yet been brought under the restraints of a Redeemer's grace.

CHAP. V.—ANNO DOMINI, 64.

We had several important exhortations in the close of the foregoing chapter, and they are continued in this: particularly, 1. We have here an exhortation to mutual love and charity, ver. 1, 2. 2. Against all manner of uncleanness, ver. 3—20. 3. The apostle directs to the conscientious discharge of relative duties, from ver. 21. throughout this, and in the beginning of the next chapter.

1. BE [a] ye therefore followers of God, as dear children; 2. And [b] walk in love, as Christ also [c] hath loved us, and hath given himself for us an offering, and a sacrifice to God for a sweet-smelling savour. 3. But [d] fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints; 4. [e] Neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient: but rather giving of thanks. 5. For this ye know, [f] that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God. 7. [g] Let no man deceive you with vain words: for [h] because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of * disobedience. 7. [i] Be not ye therefore partakers with them. 8. [k] For ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord: [l] walk as children of light; 9. (For [m] the fruit of the Spirit is

Verses 1—20. Love is the divine principle through which alone the practice of all holiness can be made easy and natural to us. This therefore,

1. The apostle inculcates. Be ye followers of God as dear children, acting according to this high relation, and in your spirit and temper resembling your heavenly Father; and walk in love, which is his brightest attribute, and renders you most like the blessed Redeemer, as Christ also hath loved us, with a love so surpassing great, so free, so unchangeable; and hath given himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savour, to make atonement for our sins, and to reconcile us to God by his own blood, his sacrifice being infinitely meritorious and acceptable. Note, (1.) Love is the characteristic mark of a child of God, and a disciple of Jesus. (2.) The sacrifice of the Lamb of God is fully efficacious: God is well pleased in the oblation of his Son; and all who draw near through him are sure of acceptance.

2. He warns them against all manner of uncleanness. But fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, the lawless desires of fleshly concupiscence, let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints, but avoided with the utmost detestation, and never once so much as mentioned; neither filthiness, in gesture, habit, or discourse; nor foolish talking, in secret innuendos, or vain, light, and unprofitable conversation; nor jesting, with wantonness, about things sacred, or to the hurt of others; which are not convenient, but utterly unbecoming a Christian's profession, who should rather be employed in giving thanks, and use his tongue as an instrument to set forth God's glory.

3. He enforces his exhortation by the most weighty arguments:

(1.) These sins must necessarily exclude us from heaven, and lay us under the eternal wrath of God. For this ye know, according to the unchangeable word of God, that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, whose heart is the sty of lewd desires, or who is inordinately eager after gain, and consequently is an idolater, loving and serving the creature more than the Creator, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God, but must be for ever excluded from the divine favour. Let no man deceive you with vain words, as if these sins were not so dangerous; and with some soft names of human infirmity, or venial transgressions, endeavour to satisfy your consciences, and embolden you to hope for impunity; for know assuredly, because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience and unbelief, who, despising God's warnings, perish eternally under the deluge of his fiery wrath. Be not ye therefore partakers with them, by communion with them, or connivance at them, lest you become involved in their punishment. Note, It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. We should often consider it, that we might tremble, and avoid the very distant approaches of evil, that hath consequences so dreadfully dangerous.

(2.) What God hath done for us should engage us to be faithful to him. For ye were sometimes darkness, and in this wretched state were blindly led on by vile affections to every abomination, ignorant of God and your own danger, and rushing headlong to ruin; but now are ye light in the Lord, since he hath shined into your hearts, and given you the knowledge of his will, and wrought effectually by his gospel to turn you to his blessed Self in the practice of true holiness; therefore walk as children of the light, agreeable to the obligations lying upon you, and the measure of knowledge and grace which you have received. For the fruit of the Spirit, which the Lord hath given you to illumine your darkness, and quicken your souls from the death of sin, is in all goodness, and righteousness and truth; it appears in every act of tenderness and beneficence towards the needy, in all purity of heart towards God, and uprightness in our dealings with men, and engages us to a holy simplicity and unimpeached fidelity in all our words and works; in which things, as children of light, you will therefore habitually walk; proving what is acceptable unto the Lord, desiring out of his word to learn his mind and will, and to approve yourselves to him in all holy conversation and godliness. And, for this end, have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, neither by countenance nor connivance at them in others, any more than by practising them yourselves; they are works of darkness, the deeds of a fallen and corrupted heart, and that seek usually the covert of the night: unfruitful of every thing but misery, wrath, and wretchedness. Instead therefore of joining in them, rather, wherever they appear in any brother, bear an open testimony against them; and with zeal tempered with love, boldly reprove them. Note, (1.) The fallen mind is darkness itself: they who are under its influence take hold of the paths of death and hell, and know not whither they are going. (2.) Where God hath given us the light of his truth, every wilful sin is infinitely aggravated. (3.) They who are truly sensible of the evil and danger of sin, will not see it upon their brother, without a kind and faithful rebuke.

(3.) The very shocking and shameful nature of these sins should deter us from them. For it is a shame even to speak of those things, which are done of them in secret; the very mention of them must offend a modest ear, and how much more must the practice of them provoke a holy God? But all things that are reproved, as such evils must be, are made manifest by the light of God's word which hath shined into your hearts, and are thereby discovered in their native deformity, and hateful colours; for whatsoever doth make manifest is light; as the sun illumines the world that otherwise would be covered in darkness, so doth Christ in his gospel, arising as the Sun of Righteousness, shine into the hearts of his people, giving them light and discernment in spiritual things, which were before utterly hid from their eyes; and enabling them to see the evil and danger of those tempers and practices, which before they never apprehended. Wherefore he saith, when calling the souls of sinners out of darkness into his marvellous light, Awake thou that sleepest in security, ignorance, and insensibility, and arise from the dead, from thy state of death in trespasses and sins, and Christ shall give thee light, the light of life and truth, to conduct thee in the paths of holiness to the regions of glory; and wherever this light is spoken into the soul, then it will be evident by an abhorrence of evil, and such a conversation as will bear the strictest scrutiny.

4. On what he had said, he grounds this farther exhortation: See then that ye walk circumspectly, narrowly examining every step you take, not as fools, but as wise, as those who have been taught the truth as it is in Jesus, redeeming the time, making the best improvement of the present moment, and desirous to retrieve, in a measure, the time and opportunity which hath been lost; because the days are evil, and require greater watchfulness when iniquity so abounds, when temptations so many and great beset you; and you know not how soon you may be cut off. Wherefore, be not unwise, as in the former days of folly and unregeneracy, but understanding what the will of the Lord is, that ye may know how to walk and please him, and be found faithful to the light which he is pleased to give you. Note, (1.) If we consider how much of our time we have abused and squandered, it will become us with peculiar diligence to improve the pittance which remains. (2.) Evil days require especial circumspection. (3.) The worst and most fatal folly is the ignorance of God's word and neglect of our souls.

How we must redeem our time, and walk according to the divine prescription, the apostle, in several particulars, proceeds to show,

1. Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess, as the heathen, at their Bacchanalian feasts, and the dreadful consequences of drunkenness are numberless; for when the mind is once intoxicated, a wide door is opened to every act of extravagance, folly, riot, debauchery, uncleanness, and there remains no restraint from the greatest abominations.

2. But, on the contrary, be filled with the Spirit; seek to drink deeper into the sacred fountain of his divine light, grace, strength, and consolation, which will inspire the most exquisite and sacred pleasure and delight; not roaring round the board of riot, and joining the mad songs of the drunken, but speaking to yourselves, and each other, in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs, uniting your voices in the Redeemer's praise, singing and making melody in your hearts to the Lord, with inward exultation in God as your Saviour, and every outward expression that tends to exalt his great and glorious name, giving thanks always for all things, your hearts in every dispensation acknowledging a gracious God, and your tongue employed in thanksgiving unto God and the Father, in the name of our Lord Jesus, through whom all our services are accepted, and by whom all the dispensations of providence and grace are made to work together for our good. Note, (1.) Psalmody is a gospel ordinance, and they who are happy in God will delight in his praises. (2.) Whatever our condition or circumstances may be, there is always room for thanksgiving. Afflictions, as well as mercies, demand a grateful acknowledgment; they are good for us, and we shall, in the issue, find the blessed effects of them.

21. [d] Submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God. 22. [e] Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, [f] as unto the Lord. 23. For [g] the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is [h] the head of the church: and he is [i] the Saviour of the [k] body. 24. Therefore, as the church is subject unto Christ, [l] so let the wives be to their own husbands in every thing. 25. [m] Husbands, love your wives, even as [n] Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it; 26. That [o] he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word; 27. That he might present it to himself a glorious church, [p] not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish. 28. So ought men to love their wives as [q] their own bodies. He that loveth his wife loveth himself. 29. For no man ever yet hated his own flesh: but nourisheth and cherisheth it, even as the Lord the church: 30. For we are [r] members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones. 31. [s] For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall be joined unto his wife, and they two shall be one flesh. 32. This is a great mystery: but I speak [t] concerning Christ and the church. 33. Nevertheless, let every one of you in particular [u] so love his wife even as himself; and the wife see that she [x] reverence her husband.

Verses 21—33. The apostle proceeds to exhort them to the discharge of those relative duties, which are the great ornament of Christianity.

In general a spirit of gentleness and mutual forbearing must reign in you, submitting yourselves one to another, in all natural and civil relations, in public and private, making conscience of discharging the duties of your several stations, and in the fear of God, willingly in subjection to those whom he hath placed as your superiors.

1. Your duty as wives is to submit yourselves unto your own husbands, in all reverence, honour, and dutiful obedience; consulting their will, and content to be in subjection, as unto the Lord, regarding him as the author of your subordination, and submitting, as the church doth to him. For the husband is the head of the wife, by divine appointment, as Christ is the head of the church; and he is the Saviour of the body, having bought her even at the expense of his own blood, and with the most endearing tenderness and affection providing whatever is needful for her support and comfort. Therefore as the church is bound, by every tie of love and duty, to be subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in every thing, not contradictory to their duty towards God. Note, The direction is clear and obvious, but the difficulty is for a fallen spirit to acquiesce. Let those therefore who enter into the marriage state seriously consider their obligations, before they lay themselves under the solemn vow of obedience in all things.

2. The duty of husbands is this, Love your wives with singleness of affection, which speaks in every word and look of tenderness, with gentleness desiring to rule, not tyrannize, and, by every endearing art of persuasion, winning obedience, rather than haughtily and imperiously demanding subjection, remembering and imitating the love of Christ to his church, who gave himself for it, even to the death of the cross, that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, in his atoning blood opening a fountain for sin and uncleanness, to which, by faith, his people might come according to his word, and be effectually delivered from all their guilt, and defilement of body and soul; that, being thus cleansed, he might present it to himself, as a chaste virgin, adorned for her heavenly bridegroom, a glorious church, beautiful in his blood, and bright in the robes of his righteousness, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing, but appearing in perfect comeliness and purity; that, as the sacrifices under the law, it should be holy and without blemish. So ought men to love their wives according to this love of Christ, even as their own bodies, they being now a real part of themselves: he that loveth his wife loveth himself. For no man ever yet hated his own flesh; but nourisheth and cherisheth it; our own flesh is not nearer to us than our wives, and the same affectionate care is due to them, even as the Lord hath showed to the church: for we are members of his body mystical, of his flesh, and of his bones, like the woman formed from the first man's side. For this cause, seeing the union is so close, shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall be joined unto his wife, in peculiar singleness of affection, and they two shall be one flesh, as if they literally became one body. This is a great mystery, these words being figuratively of a more happy and excellent marriage than that of the first man and woman; and I mean, in their application, to lead you, not merely to consider the original law of marriage, but I speak concerning Christ and the Church, to whom they emphatically belong. Nevertheless let every one of you in particular so love his wife even as himself, as the members of his own body, and let the wife see that she reverence her husband with all conjugal love, and jealous fear of offending.

CHAP. VI.—ANNO DOMINI, 64.

In this chapter, (1.) The apostle proceeds in the exhortation to relative duties, which he began in the former: Particularly he insists on the duties of children and parents; and of servants and masters, ver. 1—9. (2.) He exhorts and directs Christians how to behave themselves in the spiritual warfare with the enemies of their souls; and to the exercise of several Christian graces, which he proposes to them as so many pieces of spiritual armour, to preserve and defend them in the conflict, ver. 10—18. (3.) We have here the conclusion of the epistle, in which he takes his leave of them, recommending himself to the prayers of the believing Ephesians, and praying for them, ver. 19—24.

1. CHILDREN, [a] obey your parents in the Lord: for this is right. 2. [b] Honour thy father and mother; (which is the first commandment with promise;) 3. That it may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long on the earth. 4. And, [c] ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath: but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. 5. [d] Servants, be obedient to them that are your masters according to the flesh, with fear and trembling, in [e] singleness of your heart, as unto Christ: 6. Not with eye-service, as men-pleasers; but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart; 7. [f] With good-will doing service, [g] as to the Lord, and not to men: 8. Knowing, [h] that whatsoever good thing any man doeth, the same shall he receive of the Lord, whether he be bond or free. 9. [i] And, ye masters, do the same things unto them, * forbearing threatening: knowing that [k] your Master also is in heaven; [l] neither is there respect of persons with him.

Verses 1—9. The apostle proceeds with those relative duties which he had begun to enforce in the former chapter, beginning still with the inferior relation; for dutiful obedience will lay the strongest obligations on the superior to show all condescension and love in return. We have,

1. The duty of children to their parents. Children obey your parents; hear their counsels, and submit to their commands, this being the debt you owe them, both as the authors under God of your being, and for all the care they have shown you, and this in the Lord, as far as is agreeable to his word, and for his glory. Honour thy father and mother, saith the law; reverence them, speak respectfully to and of them, and if needful provide for them, (which is the first commandment with a particular promise annexed to it,) that it may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long on the earth.

2. The duty of parents. And ye fathers provoke not your children to wrath by unreasonable tasks, severities, or restraints, but with all lenity, tenderness, and affection, endeavour by love and kind persuasion to win upon them, and bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, instructing them in the knowledge of the scriptures, setting before them a gracious example, directing them to the means of grace, and watching over them with holy jealousy.

3. The duty of servants. Servants be obedient to them that are your masters according to the flesh, in all their lawful commands, with becoming fear of their displeasure, and trembling lest at any time you should justly offend them; in singleness of your heart, as unto Christ, without flattery, deceit, or guile, with a regard to the Redeemer's glory, not with eye-service as men-pleasers, diligent only so long as they look over you, merely to curry favour with them, but as the servants of Christ, under his constant and all-seeing inspection, and therefore doing the will of God from the heart, and discharging the duties of the station in which he hath placed you with all fidelity and truth. With good will doing service, with cheerfulness and alacrity, from a principle of love to your masters and a real zeal for their honour and interest, and this as to the Lord and not to men, desiring, not so much human, as the divine approbation, and acting from a sense of duty to the great Lord of all. Knowing that whatsoever good thing any man doeth, however mean his station, and inconsiderable in itself the service may be, the same shall he receive of the Lord, who will suitably reward his fidelity, whether he be bond or free.

4. The duty of masters. And ye masters, do the same things unto them, show the same readiness conscientiously to discharge your relation to them, forbearing threatening, not tyrannizing over them, and terrifying them with sternness and menaces, but choosing to rule by love rather than fear, knowing that your Master also is in heaven, to whom you must give an account, neither is there respect of persons with him; all stand at his bar on a level, and must receive from his lips their eternal sentence for happiness or misery.

Verses 10—20. Every Christian is enlisted under the banners of Jesus, to fight the Lord's battles, and to maintain unceasing war against sin, the world, and the devil. The apostle therefore warmly exhorts them to quit themselves as men under the glorious Captain of their salvation. Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might, supported by those almighty influences of grace, which he supplies, in whom alone standeth our help, and from whom cometh our salvation. Put on the whole armour of God, as a soldier covered from head to foot, with armour proof against every weapon, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil, and neither be seduced by his ensnaring temptations, nor terrified by his suggestions, from the path of duty.

1. The enemies we have to conflict with are described. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, not only against the corruptions implanted in our own nature, or the wicked men of this world, who oppose and persecute, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places, even against those legions of malignant spirits, who, under their hateful leader, have erected a kingdom of darkness, and enslaved the souls of men, and ever hover round us, watching for an opportunity to distress, harass, trouble, and, if they could, to destroy, those who have escaped from their hateful bondage.

2. Having such foes, we need be well armed against their assaults. Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God, so absolutely necessary for this dangerous conflict, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, when this hour of temptation and danger comes, and having done all, to stand; faithfully acquitting yourselves as good soldiers of Jesus Christ, through every trial, however sharp or prolonged; and more than conquerors at last, through him that loved you, when in a resurrection day you shall tread sin, Satan, death, and hell, for ever under your feet. Stand, therefore, the enemy advances, be ready to receive him, looking up to your mighty support, and invulnerable in the divine panoply. The Christian's complete armour, both offensive and defensive, is here in military terms described; the back alone is left unguarded, for we must conquer or die. Flight is sure to be fatal to the coward soul.

1. Truth must be our military girdle. Having our loins girt about with truth, firm in the doctrines of the gospel, and sincere in the profession of it, in simplicity approving yourselves before the heart-searching God.

2. Righteousness is our breastplate. Having on the breastplate of righteousness, imputed and implanted, to guard the vital parts from the stroke of the envenomed foe.

3. Our sandals must be the gospel of peace. Having your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, that whatever rough ways we may walk in, and whatever difficulties we meet, we may stand fast in the gospel of Jesus, prepared for every conflict, established on the sure foundation, enjoying peace with God in our own souls, and following it with all men.

4. Faith is our shield. Above all, as the most necessary piece of armour, and that which covers the whole body, taking the shield of faith, having lively and realizing views of the divine promises of pardon, grace, righteousness, and glory, confidently resting upon them, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked, when with fury he hurls his envenomed temptations at the soul, to despair, blasphemy, lewdness, rage, even to self-murder, seeking to bring horror, guilt, anguish, and distress upon the conscience, though he may not be able to destroy; but divine faith repels them all, quenches them, and they fall harmless at our feet.

5. Salvation is our helmet. And take the helmet of salvation, that sure hope of life eternal, grounded upon the faithfulness of the unchangeable God, that guards from dejection, and raises us superior to every fear.

6. The mighty sword is the word of God. And take the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, before which the legions of darkness cannot stand, when wielded by the faithful soldier, slaying every temptation, and opening a way through hosts of difficulties.

7. Prayer must be added. Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, looking upwards constantly for divine support, in every emergence casting your care upon God, in ejaculations, and, at stated solemn seasons, commending yourselves into the Lord's hands, and watching thereunto with all perseverance, never weary or giving over, though the conflict be hard and long, and no immediate answer received; and, as for yourselves, so also continue ceaseless in supplication for all saints, engaged in the same warfare, contending with the same enemies, and needing the same divine support. And, among others, for me also, under my trials, that utterance may be given unto me, that I may open my mouth boldly, fearless of any consequences, to make known the mystery of the gospel, and publish the glad tidings with all zeal, openness, and freedom of speech, without concealing any of the glorious truths, however offensive they be to men's pride or love of sin; for which fidelity I am an ambassador of Christ in bonds, suffering cheerfully, and still desiring, even in a prison, to negotiate the great affair of reconciliation between God and sinners: and I entreat your prayers, that therein, under whatever difficulties I struggle, I may speak boldly, as I ought to speak, undaunted in my spirit, and without molestation. Note, (1.) Prayer is the Christian's constant recourse and sure support in every exigence. (2.) Whilst we continue persevering in our supplications, we shall assuredly go on conquering and to conquer. (3.) We should mutually remember each other at a throne of grace; all saints need our prayers, and should have an interest in them.

Peace be to the brethren, and love with faith, from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. 24. [o] Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ [p] in sincerity. Amen.

Verses 21—24. Having desired an interest in their prayers, he concludes his epistle,

1. With recommending Tychicus to them, the bearer of this epistle. But that ye also may know my affairs, and how I do in my present confinement, Tychicus, a beloved brother and faithful minister in the Lord, shall make known to you all things concerning my situation, labours, treatment, and success, even in bonds: whom I have sent unto you for the same purpose, that ye might know my affairs, and that he might comfort your hearts, amidst all the trials you meet, and encourage you, for my example, patiently and cheerfully to persevere in the good ways of the Lord.

2. He closes with his usual benediction and prayer. Peace be to the brethren; may you enjoy a sweet sense of God's favour, be blessed with all prosperity, temporal and spiritual, and live in the most uninterrupted harmony among yourselves; and may love to God and to each other abound, with faith, in the most lively and vigorous exercise; all which spiritual blessings flow from God the Father, as their source in the economy of redemption, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, as the purchaser and dispenser of them to his chosen people. Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, (εν αφθαρσια,) with unfeigned affection, or with incorruption, without adulterating the doctrines of truth, or admitting any earthly thing to rival him in their hearts; or with immortality, may his grace and your love be perfected in glory everlasting. Thus in faith he prays, and adds his joyful Amen! in confidence that the Lord will hear and answer his requests.

A PRACTICAL COMMENT

UPON THE

EPISTLE OF ST PAUL

TO THE

PHILIPPIANS.

Introduction.

PHILIPPI was a chief city of the western part of Macedonia, πρωτη της μεριδος της Μακεδονιας πολις, Acts xvi. 12. It took its name from Philip, the famous king of Macedonia, who repaired and beautified it; and was afterwards made a Roman colony. Near this place were the Campi Philippici, remarkable for the famous battles between Julius Cesar and Pompey the Great; and that between Augustus and Antony on one side, and Brutus and Cassius on the other. But it is most remarkable among Christians for this epistle, which was written when Paul was prisoner at Rome, A. D. 64.

St Paul seems to have had a very particular kindness for the church at Philippi, which he himself had been instrumental in planting; and though he had the care of all the churches, he had, upon that account, a particular fatherly tender care of this. He looked upon them as his children, and having begotten them by the gospel, he was desirous by the same gospel to nourish and nurse them up.

From small beginnings they had arisen to a flourishing church; and in their liberality to the apostle were distinguished, of which he makes grateful and honourable mention; expressing his warm affection towards them; informing them of his success even in prison; encouraging them to bear up under all opposition; exhorting them to mutual love; warning them against deceivers, and stirring them up to all holy conversation and godliness.

Verses 1, 2. The apostolical inscription and benediction opens the epistle, Paul and Timotheus, who joins him in all cordial salutations, the servants of Jesus Christ in the gospel, to all the saints in Christ Jesus which are at Philippi, chosen in him, and in the fulness of time brought into real union with him in faith and holiness, with the bishops, the superior officers in the church, and deacons their assistants; *Grace be unto you, and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ. Verses 3—11. The apostle, after his gracious introduction, begins,

1. With thanksgivings to God on their behalf. I thank my God upon every remembrance of you, and of the rich grace he hath bestowed upon you, (always, in every prayer of mine for you all, making request with joy, delighting in and over you,) for your fellowship in the gospel, thankful for all the inestimable privileges to which you have been admitted, for the love and union maintained among you, and for your liberality in contributing to the furtherance of the gospel, from the first day until now, with steadfastness and perseverance in the midst of all opposition, continuing to approve your fidelity. Note, (1.) It is a great joy to a minister's soul, when his people walk steadily in the fellowship of the gospel. (2.) Our grateful thanksgivings are ever due whilst we are mentioning the divine mercies.

2. He expresses his confidence concerning them. Being confident of this very thing, that he which hath begun a good work in you, by his sovereign grace converting your souls, according to his unchangeable promises and love, will perform and finish it until the day of Jesus Christ, when your salvation shall be perfected for ever. Note, (1.) Whatever good is found in us, it comes from God, who worketh in us to will and to do of his good pleasure. (2.) He who is the author must also be the finisher of the work of grace, that in eternity he may have all the praise. (3.) Where God begins, we may be confident he will bring to a happy end. His work is perfect, and his gifts and callings without repentance.

3. He gives the reasons for that confidence in them which he entertained. Even as it is meet for me to think this of you all, bound in the judgment of charity to esteem the whole church and every member true to their profession. And I the more readily entertain such a persuasion of you, because I have you in my heart, embraced with my warmest affections, and sharing my constant remembrances, inasmuch as both in my bonds, and in the defence and confirmation of the gospel, ye are all partakers of my grace, enduring the like tribulations as I suffer, and by your sympathy with me, and your readiness to assist me, both in my bonds, and amidst all the opposition which I meet in defence of the gospel, ye manifestly appear to have received out of the same Redeemer's fulness. Note, We are bound to think well of those, who not only make a creditable profession, but dare to suffer for the truth themselves, or nobly own, even in bonds, those who do.

4. He appeals to God for the warm attachment of his heart unto them. For God is my record, how greatly I long after you all in the bowels of Jesus Christ, with the truest spiritual affection, like that which Jesus himself feels for precious souls.

5. He tells them what were his prayers for them. And this I pray, (1.) That your love may abound yet more and more towards God and one another. (2.) That ye may advance in knowledge and in all judgment, grounded and settled in the true principles of the gospel, and that thus your love may be increased day by day. (3.) That ye may approve the things that are excellent, bringing every thing to the test of God's word, that their different excellences may be ascertained; and examining by this unerring rule the doctrines of seducers, that the purity of the gospel may be maintained in opposition to their errors. (4.) That we may be sincere and without offence, or allowed guile, before God and man, true to your principles and upright in your conduct, till the day of Christ, persevering in your fidelity, and walking as those who constantly eye a heart-searching God, and a judgment-day. (5.) Being thus found faithful, you will be filled with the fruits of righteousness, with every divine temper and gracious work which the Spirit of God produces in the redeemed, and which are by Jesus Christ, accepted through him as well as derived from him, unto the praise and glory of God. His own glory is the great end which he proposes in all his works, and which we therefore should ever regard as the great end of our being.

12. But I would ye should understand, brethren, that the things which happened unto me [t] have fallen out rather unto the furtherance of the gospel; 13. So that [u] my bonds ‖ in Christ are manifest in all [x] the palace, and * in all other places; 14. And many of the brethren in the Lord, [y] waxing confident by my bonds, are much more bold to speak the word without fear. 15. [z] Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strife; and some also [a] of good-will: 16. [b] The one preach Christ of contention, not sincerely, supposing to add affliction to my bonds: 17. But the other [c] of love, knowing that [d] I am set for the defence of the gospel. 18. What then? notwithstanding, every way, [e] whether in pretence, or in truth, Christ is preached; and I therein do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice. 19. [f] For I know that this shall turn to my salvation [g] through your prayer, and the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ, 20. [h] According to my earnest expectation and my hope, that in nothing I shall be ashamed, but that with all boldness, as always, [i] so now also, Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life or by death.

Verses 12—20. Nothing could tend more gloriously to remove the ignominy of Paul's chain, or to comfort the hearts of his spiritual children, who might be much dejected at his reproaches and sufferings, than the account which he here gives.

1. Even in his bonds the gospel was not bound, but his sufferings tended to confirm and propagate the knowledge of the truth. I would ye should understand, brethren, that the things which happened unto me, dark and afflictive as the dispensation might appear to you, have fallen out rather to the furtherance of the gospel; for God can easily bring the greatest good out of what appeared the greatest evil. Thus the blood of the martyrs hath ever been the seed of the church. So that my bonds in Christ are manifest in all the palace, where my sufferings for the gospel, and patient fortitude under them, are known to all the great men of Nero's court, and in all other places, and are made the happy occasion of raising inquiries about the gospel in those who might not otherwise have heard it, and of bringing some under the joyful sound even out of Cesar's household. And many of the brethren in the Lord, waxing confident by my bonds, and fully satisfied of the goodness of the cause, and of the hand of the Lord visible in the support he gives me, are much more bold than ever to speak the word without fear, and to proclaim the salvation which is only to be found in a crucified Jesus. Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strife, taking this opportunity of my imprisonment to pursue the base end of setting up themselves, even under the covert of zeal for the gospel, envying my reputation, and hoping to supplant me in the affection of the churches; and some also of good will, with hearty affection to the cause, and true regard for me. The one preach Christ of contention, out of mere pride and rivalship; not sincerely, from a right principle of love unfeigned: but from envy, supposing to add affliction to my bonds, by ingratiating themselves, to my prejudice, with the members of the churches, or hoping to incense the government more against me by the noise they make, and the divisions they seek to raise; but the other preach Christ of love, truly attached to the Saviour, and longing to promote the salvation of immortal souls: knowing that I am set for the defence of the gospel, and suffered to bear these bonds on purpose to have an opportunity before the highest in this world, publicly to vindicate and defend the cause of Christ. Note, (1.) Strange as it may appear that any should preach Christ out of envy, so subtle is the tempter, and so corrupt the heart of man, that even the gospel may be turned into the gall of asps, and made the pedestal on which the proud heart would erect its reputation. (2.) Faithful souls are whetted by opposition, and made more bold by bonds and reproaches.

2. He expresses the joy he felt in his own soul, amidst all he suffered from open enemies and false friends. What then? though some act on principles so base, notwithstanding, every way, whether in pretence, or in truth, Christ is preached; and I therein do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice: if his name is spread abroad, and his gospel propagated, that is matter of real joy; and the ministry may be blessed though the preacher perishes. For I know that this shall turn to my salvation, however different the designs of these men may be, and serve to procure my liberty the sooner, as well as to advance my soul's present and eternal benefit, through your prayers daily offered up for me, and the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ, which can enable me to improve under every dispensation, and make it to work for good. According to my earnest expectation and hope that I shall be supported and delivered, and that in nothing I shall be ashamed of that glorious cause for which I suffer; but that with all boldness, and unshaken fortitude of mind, as always hitherto I have been enabled to act, so now also, Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life or by death; by longer patient suffering, if such be his will; by a faithful discharge of my trust, should I regain my liberty; or by sealing the testimony with my blood, if his glory so requires. Note, (1.) We are much indebted to our brethren's prayers. (2.) The supply of the Spirit of Christ can make up all other wants, and cause every providence to prove a blessing. (3.) If we are not a shame to the gospel, we need never be ashamed of it, though devoted, for the sake thereof, to the most ignominious death.

21. [k] For [l] to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain. 22. But [m] if I live in the flesh, [n] this is the fruit of my labour; yet what I shall choose I wot not. 23. For I am in a strait betwixt two, [o] having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ; which is far better: 24. Nevertheless, [p] to abide in the flesh is more needful for you. 25. And having this confidence, I know that [q] I shall abide and continue with you all, for your furtherance and [r] joy of faith; 26. [s] That your rejoicing may be more abundant in Jesus Christ for me by my coming to you again.

Verses 21—26. The apostle was happy to die, yet for their sakes content to live.

For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain; living or dying, he is to me all and in all; for his glory I only desire to live, and in whatever way I die in his cause and service, I know it shall prove my everlasting gain. But if I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labour, to preach and suffer for the truth's sake, in order to advance my great Master's cause: yet what I shall choose

I wot not, whether life or death: for I am in a strait betwixt two; having a desire to depart and to be with Christ, longing for the heavenly blessedness in store, and to see him face to face, where sin, sorrow, and sighing, shall for ever flee away; which is far better than any possible situation which I can be in here below; nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for you; and for your benefit I can gladly forego for a while my own happiness, and conflict still amidst the opposing powers of earth and hell. And having this confidence, that my abode below will be for your edification, I know, by divine intimations, that I shall abide and continue with you all, for your furtherance and joy of faith, to confirm and establish you yet more and more; that your rejoicing may be more abundant in Christ Jesus for me, by my coming to you again, restored to liberty, and enabled to resume my useful labours among you. Note, (1.) If we can say with truth, to live is Christ, that his glory is our single aim, we may confidently add, to die is gain; how great heaven can only tell. (2.) But for one thing can earth be truly desirable to the faithful, and that is the service which can be rendered to immortal souls, and the glory accruing thence to the Redeemer: for this therefore he lives.

27. Only [c] let your conversation be as it becometh the gospel of Christ: that [u] whether I come and see you, or else be absent, I may hear of your affairs, that [x] ye stand fast in one spirit, with one mind striving together for the [y] faith of the gospel; 28. And [z] in nothing terrified by your adversaries: which is to them an [a] evident token of perdition, but to you [b] of salvation, and that of God. 29. For unto you [c] it is given in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake; 30. Having the same conflict [d] which ye saw in me, and now hear to be in me.

Verses 27—30. The apostle closes with two exhortations.

1. Only let your conversation be as becometh the gospel of Christ, (πολιτευεσθε.)

Behave as citizens of the heavenly Jerusalem, walk worthy of your high vocation, adorning the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things, and proving the solidity of your hope by the spirituality of your conduct; that whether I come and see you, or else be absent, I may hear of your affairs with joy, that ye stand fast in one spirit, with one mind, striving together for the faith of the gospel, united in truth and love; resisting, with the most vigorous efforts, every persecuting or seducing foe, holding fast the unadulterated principles of grace, and building up each other in your most holy faith. Note, (1.) The faith of the gospel will ever meet with opposition. (2.) Unanimity among Christians is the great means of their establishment; while dissension and schism render them an easy prey.

2. In nothing terrified by your adversaries, however many or mighty, whether from earth or hell; but defy their malice and rage, cleaving unshaken to the blessed gospel; which is to them an evident token of perdition, but to you of salvation, and that of God; such patient and faithful suffering for the truth proves your interest in it; whilst the opposition of your foes must end in their eternal ruin. For unto you it is given, as your distinguished honour, in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him to the saving of your souls, which is an eminent gift of God, but also to suffer for his sake: having the same conflict which ye saw in me when I was with you, and steadily sustained the shock; and now hear to be in me. Note, (1.) Faith is the gift of God. (2.) Sufferings and reproaches on the behalf of Christ are real honours. (3.) It is an encouragement to us patiently to endure the cross, when we see others cheerfully bearing it before us, and glorying in tribulation.

CHAP. II.—ANNO DOMINI, 64.

The apostle proceeds to farther exhortations to several duties; to be like-minded, and lowly-minded, which he presses from the example of Christ, ver. 1—11. And to diligence and seriousness in the Christian course, ver. 12, 13. And to adorn their Christian profession by several suitable graces, ver. 14—18. And concludes with particular notice and commendation of two good ministers, Timothy and Epaphroditus; whom he designed to send to them, ver. 19—30.

1. IF [a] there be therefore any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any bowels and mercies, 2. [b] Fulfil ye my joy, that ye [c] be like-minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind. 3. [d] Let nothing be done through strife or vain glory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves. 4. [e] Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others. 5. [f] Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: 6. Who, [g] being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: 7. But made himself of [h] no reputation, and took upon him [i] the form of a servant, and [k] was made in the * likeness of men: 8. And being found in fashion as a man, [l] he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. 9. Wherefore [g] God also [m] hath highly exalted him, and given him [n] a name which is above every name: 10. [o] That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; 11. And that every tongue should confess [p] that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

Verses 1—11. By every endearing argument the apostle exhorts his Philippian brethren,

1. To love, unity, and humility. If there be any consolation in Christ, (παρακλησις,) if my exhortation hath any weight, and you experience any joy in the Redeemer; if there be any comfort of love, from the sense of the love of God shed abroad in your hearts; if there be any fellowship of the Spirit, in mutual union and complacence in each other, or through the Holy Ghost, with God the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ; if there be any bowels and mercies, in the gracious Saviour towards you; or if you have ever felt the like tender compassions one towards another; if it be most desirable to abound in all these things, and you have already known their value and excellence, fulfil ye my joy, and continue to give me this highest satisfaction in you, that ye be like-minded, animated as by one soul; having the same love one towards another, as the members of the same body; being of one accord, unanimous in desire and design to promote the Redeemer's glory, and the salvation of men's souls; and of one mind, holding the same principles and sentiments, according to the purity of the gospel. Let nothing be done through strife or vain glory; affect no pre-eminence, dispute not for applause, nor speak or act under a contentious spirit; but in lowliness of mind, the great ornament of the Christian character, let each esteem other better than themselves; entertaining lowly thoughts of their own attainments, conscious of their manifold infirmities, and entertaining the best opinion of their brethren. Look not every man at his own things, to admire himself, or pursue his own selfish ends, his ease, honour, or worldly advantage; but every man also on the things of others; not as busy bodies, to pry into them censoriously, but desiring to promote their real good, and from the view of their excellences to be humble in your own eyes.

2. He enforces his exhortation with the most powerful argument, the example of the blessed Jesus. Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus, even that lowliness which in him was so eminently exemplified; who being in the form of God, possessing every essential perfection of the divine nature, the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person, thought it not robbery to be equal with God, and justly to claim a parity with the Father in uncreated glory: But, in infinite condescension and pity towards us, he made himself of no reputation, laying aside the splendour of his divine majesty, and took upon himself the form of a servant, assuming the human nature in the lowest condition; and was made in the likeness of men, having the same reasonable soul, and human flesh, the corruption of our nature only excepted. And being found in fashion as a man, in all things made like unto his brethren, he humbled himself before God and man, through a life of affliction, and, at last, became obedient to death, for us men, and for our salvation, even the death of the cross, that most painful, ignominious, and accursed death; submitting thereunto, that he might bear our sins in his own body on the tree. Wherefore, having finished the work which the Father had given him to do, to his fullest satisfaction, God also hath highly exalted him in his human nature to the mediatoral throne, as the reward of his sufferings, and given him a name which is above every name, all power, authority, and dominion being given to him over every creature; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, and divine honours be paid to the incarnate Son, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; by angels and men, and every intelligent creature; yea, even devils must be compelled to own his glory: and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, the universal Sovereign, to the glory of God the Father, who as man, hath thus exalted him to the throne of Majesty on high, for the purposes of his own glory. Note, (1.) The example of our Lord should be ever before us, and that, if any thing can, will suppress the workings of pride. (2.) The love of a crucified Jesus should warm our hearts, and knit them in closest union to each other.

12. Wherefore, my beloved, [q] as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, [r] work out your own salvation with [s] fear and trembling; 13. [t] For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do [u] of his good pleasure. 14. [x] Do all things without murmurings and disputings: 15. [y] That ye may be blameless and † harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom [z] ye shine as lights in the world; 16. [a] Holding forth the [b] word of life; [c] that I may rejoice in the day of Christ, that I [d] have not run in vain, neither laboured in vain. 17. [e] Yea, and if I be [f] offered upon the sacrifice and service of your faith, I joy, and rejoice with you all. 18. For the same cause also [g] do ye joy, and rejoice with me.

Verses 12—18. The apostle proceeds in his exhortations:

1. To Christian diligence. Wherefore, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, and therefore I entertain the fullest confidence of your perseverance in the same good ways of our God, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling, giving all diligence to make your calling and election sure in the use of every appointed means, jealous over your deceitful hearts, and watchful against every thing that might offend the Father of mercies, whose love you have tasted, and by whose grace your stability can only be secured; for it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure, and you may firmly depend upon him, that, amidst all opposition, he will perfect in you the work which he hath begun. Note, (1.) God, who ordains the end, appoints the means: these are inseparable: it were the height of folly and presumption to hope for salvation in the neglect of them. (2.) After all our diligence, our dependence must not be placed on ourselves, but on him who worketh in us to will and to do, not according to our desert, nor merely at our desire, but of his own good pleasure. (3.) It is the strongest motive to bestir ourselves, that we know our labour shall not be in vain in the Lord; for if he will work in us, for us, and with us, then shall we assuredly succeed.

2. To an exemplary conversation, such as may confound their enemies, and comfort him their faithful servant under all his sufferings. Do all things without murmurings and disputings, content under every providential dispensation, and studiously avoiding every occasion of contention among yourselves; that ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, and behave so irreproachably, that your most malignant accusers may have no evil thing justly to say of you: for ye dwell in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation; the keen eyes of your enemies are open, and they wait for your halting; gladly would they catch at any thing which might countenance them in their iniquities; among whom ye shine as lights in the world; your bright examples, like suns in your several spheres, darting unwelcome light upon the workers of wickedness, and shining to the glory of God: holding forth the word of life, even the blessed gospel, both in your lips and in your conduct, holding it fast in all fidelity, holding it up with all zeal and boldness, if under God it may be blessed to illumine the darkness of those around you, and bring them to the light of life; or at least to leave them inexcusable in their impenitence. And this will be a singular satisfaction to me, when I find that I have not run in vain, nor laboured in vain, but behold in you such blessed effects of my ministry, and that all my conflicts shall at last be crowned with success. Yea, and if I be offered upon the sacrifice and service of your faith, and should now be called as a victim to bleed in confirmation of the gospel which I preach, far from being intimidated with the prospect, I joy and rejoice with you all, congratulating you, and happy in myself that I am counted worthy of the crown of martyrdom, and enabled to leave so powerful a testimony behind me for the strengthening of your faith. For the same cause also do ye joy and rejoice with me, and, far from being grieved or disheartened, should exult that I am enabled to be thus faithful unto death. Note, (1.) Every Christian is a city set on a hill; he needs peculiar circumspection; a flaw in his conduct will be exaggerated into a fault of the first magnitude. (2.) We must hold up to the world, in our profession and examples, the word of life; not ostentatiously proclaiming our own goodness, but, for God's glory and the profit of men's souls, showing our light before men. (3.) Nothing can more revive a minister's heart, and make him so cheerfully content to suffer for the cause, even to death, as seeing his labours successful and his ministry blessed.

19. [h] ‡ But I trust in the Lord Jesus to send [i] Timotheus shortly unto you, that I also may be of good comfort, when I know your state. 20. For I have no man [k] like-minded, who will naturally care for your state. 21. For all [l] seek their own, not the things which are Jesus Christ's. 22. But ye know the proof of him, that [m] as a son with the father, he hath served with me in the gospel. 23. Him therefore I hope to send presently, so soon as I shall see how it will go with me. 24. But [n] I trust in the Lord that I also myself shall come shortly. 25. Yet I supposed it necessary to send to you [o] Epaphroditus, my brother, and companion in labour, and fellow-soldier, but your messenger, and he that ministered to my wants. 26. For he [p] longed after you all, and was full of heaviness, because that ye had heard that he had been sick. 27. For indeed he was [q] sick nigh unto death: but God had mercy on him; and not on him only, [r] but on me also, lest I should have sorrow upon sorrow. 28. I sent him therefore the more carefully, that, when ye see him again, ye may rejoice, and that I may be the less sorrowful. 29. [s] Receive him therefore in the Lord with all gladness; and || hold such in reputation: 30. Because for [t] the work of Christ he was nigh unto death, not regarding his life, to supply your lack of service toward me.

Verses 19—30. Since he was now unable to visit them himself, he promises to send them two of his dearest friends to supply his absence, and speaks of them in the highest terms of regard and commendation.

1. He mentions Timothy. Though he had spoken of his readiness to die, he informs them for their comfort, that he apprehended no immediate danger, But I trust, says he, in the Lord Jesus that I shall be delivered, and, needful as his company is now to me, that I shall be able to send Timothy shortly unto you, that I also may be of good comfort when I know your state, and hear of your prosperity. For I have no man like-minded, so perfectly united in sentiment with me, and so in affection knit to you; who will therefore naturally care for your state, and with genuine regard desire to advance your soul's good. For all here, too generally at least, seek their own, desirous of ease and earthly advantages; not with a single eye, as Timothy doth, pursuing things which are Jesus Christ's, for his glory, and the edification of his people. But ye know the proof of him, by past experience, with what zeal and fidelity he laboured among you; and that as a son with the father, he hath served with me in the gospel; willing to run all hazards, to share my fatigues and sufferings, and in all duty and affection obeying me as a child. Him therefore I hope to send presently, so soon as I shall see how it will go with me, after I have appeared, as I shortly expect to do, at Cesar's tribunal: but I trust in the Lord, that I also myself shall come shortly, when I have regained my liberty. Note, (1.) They who enter the ministry with selfish views, seeking their own things, not those of Jesus Christ, shall bear their burden, when the great Shepherd and Bishop of souls appears. (2.) A faithful pastor feels the same tender concern for the children he hath begotten in the gospel, as if they were the offspring of his own body.

2. He commends to them Epaphroditus, who brought this epistle to them. But I suppose it necessary, being unable to come myself, or to spare Timothy just at this critical juncture, to send to you Epaphroditus, my brother and companion in labour, and fellow-soldier, who willingly served and suffered in the same blessed cause; but your messenger, and he that ministered to my wants; delivering your kind benefactions, and giving me every assistance which lay in his power. For he longed after you all, and earnestly wished to be labouring again among you; and was full of heaviness, because that ye had heard that he had been sick; knowing how deeply the sad news would affect you. For indeed he was sick nigh unto death; his disease, to human view, mortal and desperate: but God had mercy on him, and brought him back from the gates of the grave: and not on him only, but on me also, lest I should have sorrow upon sorrow, anguish for his loss being added to my other burdens. I sent him therefore the more carefully, and with greater haste, that when ye see him again ye may rejoice in his recovery and return to you; and that I may be the less sorrowful at his departure, when I know what delight and advantage his company will be to you. Receive him therefore in the Lord with all gladness, with cordial regard, and as the ambassador of the Redeemer; and hold such in reputation, highly respecting them for their fidelity and zeal, because for the work of Christ he was nigh unto death, having contracted his illness from the fatigues he underwent; not regarding his life, but readily hazarding his health, to supply your lack of service towards me, which the distance rendered you incapable of affording me. Note, (1.) Though we must not carelessly neglect our health, yet, when the cause of Christ demands it, a faithful minister will show a noble contempt of life, and be ready to expose himself to disease or death. (2.) They who know the value of a faithful minister, will count it a singular mercy that he is longer spared to labour, and will rejoice in him before God.

Verses 1—3. Into every church almost had the Judaizing teachers crept, and caused much trouble to the great apostle. The Philippians had been set at by them, and needed a caution against their seductions.

1. He exhorts them to rejoice in the Lord. Finally, my brethren, after what I have said for your comfort, rejoice in the Lord, as your Redeemer and Saviour, assured of your interest in all the inestimable blessings of his gospel.

2. He warns them against the false teachers. To write the same things to you, which I have often spoken, and Epaphroditus has now in charge to deliver, to me indeed is not grievous, but for you it is safe to be reminded of your danger, and kept on your guard. Beware of dogs; those cringing zealots, who fawn to ingratiate themselves with you, but design to introduce divisions among you, to bite and devour you; greedy, impudent, and worthless. Beware of evil workers, whose practices declare the badness of their principles. Beware, again, I say, of the concision, no name being contemptible enough for them, who, urging this abolished rite, would rend the peace of the church, would introduce confusion, and cut off the Gentiles from the privileges of the gospel.

3. He describes true Christianity. For we are the circumcision, really in covenant with God, and entitled to all the spiritual blessings and privileges; which worship God in the Spirit; not with the outward pomp of ceremonial rites, but with the heart, according to the gospel institutions: and rejoice or glory in Christ Jesus, as our only hope towards God, placing our whole dependence upon him, happy in the perfection of the salvation which he hath wrought out for us, and have no confidence in the flesh, nor expect acceptance with God on account of any privileges of descent from Abraham, or any righteousness which we fallen creatures can perform. Note, (1.) All true Christians live in the constant worship of God, private and public; and that not formally, but in spirit and in truth. (2.) We must despair of ourselves, and renounce all dependence upon our own doings and duties, before we can exercise faith in Jesus, and know the joys of his salvation.

Verses 4—14. None had more outward privileges than Paul; none more heartily renounced them, and fled to a better hope. His own example he proposes therefore for their imitation.

1. If any man might have confidence in outward privileges, he had as many, or more, than any of the Judaizing teachers: a native Israelite; a descendent from Benjamin the son of the beloved Rachel, the tribe that clave to the house of David and the temple, when the rest revolted; on father and mother's side a Hebrew of pure extraction; circumcised according to the law; brought up after the strictest sect a Pharisee, in the observance both of the rites of the law, and the traditions of the elders; a zealot for Judaism, even so far as to be a bitter pesecutor of Christianity; and in his outward conduct and conversation blameless and unexceptionable.

2. All this he renounced for Christ. But what things I then thought were gain to me, and raised me in excellence above other men, those I counted loss for Christ, renouncing them utterly, assured if I trusted upon them for acceptance I must be undone; and therefore resting on Christ, on his blood and righteousness alone. Yea, doubtless, and I count all things but loss, I remain in the same sentiments, disclaiming all dependence upon my present as well as past doings and duties, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord; compared with this, all besides is refuse; since I have known him as my Saviour, I want nothing more; for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, which this world holds dear: and do count them but dung, contemptible offals, fit to be cast only on the dunghill; that I may win Christ, and become partaker of the great salvation which he hath wrought out for his redeemed, and be found in him, as my city of refuge, my divine Substitute and Surety, my availing plea at the bar of God; not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, nor daring in this to appear before the Judge, conscious how little it would bear the scrutiny; but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith; that divine, complete, and spotless righteousness which my Lord hath wrought out for me, which God imputes to me as my title to justification and life eternal, and which faith embraces as all my salvation. Note, (1.) Whatever we depend upon for justification, except on Christ alone, will assuredly prove to be our eternal loss. (2.) There is but one righteousness wherein a sinner can appear before God; and there never was, nor can be, another, besides that which Jesus of Nazareth completed when he died upon the cross.

3. The apostle desired to know Christ, not only as his justifying righteousness, but as the Author of all spiritual life, and eternal blessedness. That I may know him, and experience the power of his resurrection, as the glorious head of vital influence to all his redeemed people; and the fellowship of his sufferings, daily experiencing the crucifixion of the old man, and willingly taking up my cross, however painful; being made conformable unto his death; dying unto sin, as Christ died for it; or ready to lay down my life for the gospel, whenever I may be called thereto; if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead; raised to immortal life and glory in body as well as soul, and reaching the happy port of eternal rest; whither I steer my course. Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect in holiness, as I desire to be; but I follow after, eager to be at the goal, if that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus; holding fast by that blessed Jesus, who first laid hold on me in my way to Damascus, and trusting on his power and grace to bring me to the eternal life which he hath promised, and whereunto he hath appointed me. Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended, or to be arrived at the summit of perfection; but this one thing I do, forgetting those things that are behind, resting in no present attainments, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, after higher measures of grace, I press toward the mark, for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus: with heaven in my eye, I vigorously pursue my course, bending forwards eagerly as I run, and stretching out my arms to seize the crown of righteousness, which Jesus bestows, and is to be won only through the grace and strength which he supplies. Note, (1.) To know the power of Christ's resurrection, is to experience his quickening efficacy upon our souls, and to be raised from the death of sin to the life of righteousness, as his dead body was raised from the grave to the life of glory. (2.) The greatest saints are most sensible how short they come of perfection. They who think they have grace enough, evidently show they have none at all. (3.) Christ must apprehend us first, before we can apprehend him: his power must keep us, or we shall never reach the salvation to which he hath called us. (4.) Heaven is the prize in view: happy the soul which reaches that goal.

15. Let us therefore, [z] as many as be perfect, be thus minded: and if in any thing ye be otherwise minded, God shall reveal even this unto you. 16. Nevertheless, [a] whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same thing.

Verses 15, 16. The apostle exhorts them to be united in love, and like-minded with him. Let us therefore, as many as be perfect, and far advanced in the Christian state, be thus minded; and if in any thing ye be otherwise minded, and differ from me in sentiments, God shall reveal even this unto you, and clear up to your satisfaction whatever may yet be dark or doubtful. Nevertheless, whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the same rule of God's word; let us mind the same thing, wherein we are all agreed. Note, Lesser differences of opinion should make no disunion of heart: we must wait together on God, that he may instruct us in all his holy will.

17. Brethren, [b] be followers together of me, and mark them which walk so, as ye have us for an ensample. 18. (For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you [c] even weeping, that they are [d] the enemies of the cross of Christ: 19. Verses 17—21. With warnings and exhortations he closes the chapter.

1. He warns them against the false teachers, whose character he describes. For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, concerned deeply for them, and jealous for you, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ, both in their principles and their practice; their lives being as contrary to the spirit of purity, as their dependence on circumcision and the Mosaic rites is derogatory to the grace of the gospel; unwilling to profess, or suffer for, a crucified Jesus: whose end is destruction; their errors and immoralities bringing upon them eternal ruin: whose god is their belly; serving and indulging their sensual appetites, as their chief happiness: and whose glory is in their shame; boasting themselves in their evil ways, and proud of their privileges which only serve to cover them with confusion, whilst they behave so unsuitably thereunto: who mind earthly things, and have their grovelling minds ever fixed on the interests, pleasures, and honours of this miserable world. Note, (1.) They who make their belly their god, glory in their sins, and live after the fashion of the world, will infallibly find the end of their ways to be the destruction of both body and soul. (2.) It is a bitter grief to the faithful, when they behold any that bear the Christian name a dishonour to their holy profession.

2. He exhorts them to copy the good examples which he and others showed them. Brethren, be followers together of me, as I am of Christ, and mark them who walk so, as ye have us for an ensample, and adorn the gospel they profess. For our conversation is in heaven; our traffic and concerns all lie there, and we regard ourselves as strangers upon earth, and denizens of the celestial city; from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, to come at the last day, and bring us home to his blessed self; who shall change our vile body, that now bears the most humbling marks of weakness and infirmity, and will shortly be loathsome in the dust; that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself; when death, the last of his enemies, shall be swallowed up in victory, and we shall rise, and shine, and reign with our exalted head in glory everlasting.

1. THEREFORE,[a] my brethren,[b] dearly beloved and longed for, [c] my joy and crown, so [d] stand fast in the Lord, my dearly beloved. 2. I beseech Euodias, and beseech Syntyche, [e] that they be of the same mind in the Lord. 3. And I entreat thee also, [f] true yoke-fellow, [g] help those women which laboured with me in the gospel, with Clement also, and with other my fellow-labourers, whose names are in [h] the book of life. 4. [i] Rejoice in the Lord alway; and again I say, Rejoice. 5. [k] Let your moderation be known unto all men. The Lord is at hand. 6. Be [l] careful for nothing; but in every thing by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God. 7. And [m] the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds [n] through Christ Jesus. 8. Finally, brethren, [o] whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are [p] honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report: if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things. 9. [q] Those things, which ye have both learned, and received, and heard, and seen in me, do: and [r] the God of peace shall be with you.

Verses 1—9. The apostle,

1. With the most endearing appellations, exhorts them to stand fast in the truth. Therefore, my brethren, dearly beloved and longed for, to whom my whole soul is drawn out in warmest affection, and whose salvation I so earnestly desire, longing to see you, my joy, in every remembrance of your fidelity, and crown, whom now I esteem my chief honour, and who will be my most distinguished glory in the day of Christ; so stand fast in the Lord, my dearly beloved; cleaving to that divine Redeemer in whom ye have believed; unshaken by danger, unterrified by opposition, and looking up for that Almighty grace which can make you more than conquerors. Note, (1.) None can tell the fervent longings of a faithful minister's heart after the salvation of his people's souls, but those that feel them. (2.) They who have already approved themselves faithful, are especially bound to persevere in the same blessed course.

2. He entreats, that some individuals who were at variance, either with the church, or each other, might be happily reconciled. I beseech Euodias, and beseech Syntyche, that they be of the same mind in the Lord, and lay aside their disputes, united in love and peace. And I entreat thee also, true yoke-fellow, who with me already hast heartily laboured in the cause of Christ, help those women, and endeavour to reconcile them to the church, and to each other, which have been so useful in former days, and laboured with me in the gospel, helping and assisting me; with Clement also, and with other of my fellow-labourers, whose names are in the book of life, of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, registered among the elect of God, and heirs of salvation; and happy are they whose names shall be found written there.

3. He exhorts them to holy joy. Rejoice in the Lord alway; in all circumstances, and under every trial, maintain a holy delight in God, which will sweeten every affliction; and again I say, Rejoice in him as your Saviour, your refuge, help, and hope, in every time of need.

4. Let your moderation be known unto all men (το επιεικες) show a spirit of meekness and patience, that never is wearied out with provocations, and in affection, be weaned from every inordinate attachment to this present world. The Lord is at hand, and will soon confound your Jewish adversaries in the destruction of their city and temple, and shortly will put an end to all your trials in the great day of his appearing and glory.

6. Be careful for nothing; without perplexity or tormenting solicitude about the concerns of this world, and the difficulties in your way; but in every thing, at all times, and in all circumstances, by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God; casting all your care upon him, praising him for all the past mercies you have experienced, and trusting him for whatever may be yet to come. And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus; in answer to your prayers, God will give you his blessed peace, preserving you sedate and calm amidst every storm, fortifying your minds against every foe, and keeping you in a happy serenity, neither discomposed, nor fainting under any of your troubles, till he brings you to the eternal rest which remaineth for his people in glory. Note, (1.) Though prudent forecast is not forbidden, all anxious fears, that imply distrust of God, and bring torment to the heart, are exceeding sinful. (2.) Prayer is the antidote to every ill; and whilst we have a throne of grace open, where we can pour all our complaints into the bosom of a compassionate God, however perplexed, we need never be in despair, but should quietly wait to see the salvation of God.

6. Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, agreeable to the word of God, and the dictates of sincerity and truth; whatsoever things are honest, venerable and becoming in dress, language, and deportment; whatsoever things are just and equitable in your dealings and transactions; whatsoever things are pure, in thought, word, and action; whatsoever things are lovely, and render you amiable in the sight of God and man; whatsoever things are of good report, among the truly religious; if there be any virtue, any thing truly noble, brave, and generous; if there be any thing that deserves praise and commendation, think on these things, and seriously desire to be found in the exercise of them. Those things which ye have both learned, and received, and heard, and seen in me, do; copy after my precepts and practice; and then the God of peace shall be with you, and bless you with his presence, and more abundant measures of his grace and love.

10. But I rejoiced in the Lord greatly, that now at the last your [s] care of me * hath flourished again; wherein ye were also careful, but ye lacked opportunity. 11. [t] Not that I speak in respect of want:

Verses 10—19. The Philippians had generously contributed to the apostle's support, and he gratefully mentions it to their honour.

1. He expresses his joy in the present fresh proof they had given of love to him, and regard for the cause of Christ. But I rejoiced in the Lord greatly, that now at the last your care of me hath flourished again, and you have added to your former instances of generosity; wherein ye were also careful, and would ere this have sent to my relief, but ye lacked opportunity. Though it was a debt they justly owed him, he mentions it as a favour for which he esteemed himself much obliged.

2. He obviates an ill use which might be made of what he said. Not that I speak in respect of want, as though I was distrustful of a provision, or uneasy at my worldly circumstances; for I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content, satisfied in all the will of God. I know both how to be abased, and how to abound; in the lowest circumstances composed, in the greatest affluence not elated. Every where, and in all things I am instructed, by my Divine Master, to accommodate my mind to my situation; both to be full, and to be hungry; both to abound, and to suffer need; to know the want of bread without repining, and to have abundance without abusing it to excess. I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me; and enables me for all the services and sufferings to which in his providence he is pleased to call me; notwithstanding, ye have well done, that ye did communicate with my affliction, in the seasonable relief you kindly sent. Note, (1.) Want is a great temptation to murmur, as abundance is to excess; but divine grace will enable us to accommodate our hearts to every circumstance. (2.) Though our strength is very weakness, the omnipotence of Jesus is engaged for us, and then nothing is impracticable.

3. He makes honourable mention of what they had formerly done. Now ye Philippians, know also, that in the beginning of the gospel, when I departed from Macedonia, or was ready to depart to other parts, no church communicated with me as concerning giving and receiving, but ye only; for even in Thessalonica, a city so much more wealthy than your own, where I was constrained to work hard for my bread, ye sent once and again to my necessity, when my circumstances were very strait, and my wants pressing. Not that I mention these things because I desire a gift, and want to worm myself into your favour: no such mercenary views influence my conduct; but I desire fruit that may abound to your account in the great day of recompense, when these labours of love shall be remembered and rewarded.

4. He acknowledges the receipt of what Epaphroditus brought, and how sufficient it was for his needs; assuring them that God would accept it as the most grateful sacrifice at their hands. But I have all I want, and abound: I am full, having received of Epaphroditus the things which were sent from you, an odour of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, well pleasing to God; better than the fumes of incense, or the smoke of burnt-offerings. But though I cannot repay you in kind, my God, who is all-sufficient, shall supply all your need, giving you the earthly good things you want, and especially bestowing all spiritual blessings upon you, according to his riches in glory, by Christ Jesus, which inestimable treasures he hath laid up for you, and will, through Christ Jesus, minister unto you both in time and eternity. Note, None were ever losers by what they lent to the Lord, and employed in the service of his blessed cause.

20. Now [i] unto God and our Father be glory for ever and ever. Amen. 21. [k] Salute every saint in Christ Jesus. The brethren which are with me greet you. 22. [l] All the saints salute you, chiefly they that are of Cesar's household. 23. [m] The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

Verses 20—23. We have here,

1. An ascription of praise to God. Now unto God our Father, be glory for ever and ever. Amen. He is our Father to love us, our God abundantly to provide for us. We have long experienced his love and grace; with confidence let us trust him, and ascribe to him the praise we owe for all his past kindness and everlasting promises. Note, If God be our Father, we can want no manner of thing that is good.

2. Salutations to the brethren. Salute every saint in Christ Jesus; let every member of the church be assured of my most cordial regard, and kindest wishes. The brethren which are with me, greet you with best remembrances. All the saints salute you, and join in Christian respects towards you; chiefly they that are of Cesar's household, the domestics of his family, now converted to the faith, and one in affection with you. Note, It is a comfort to a real Christian to consider, that multitudes, whom he never saw or knew, bear him upon their hearts, and remember him in their prayers.

3. His closing benediction. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, in all its incomprehensible extent, and inconceivable fulness, be with you all; may the whole church, and every member, share it in the richest abundance. Amen!

A PRACTICAL COMMENT

UPON THE

EPISTLE OF ST PAUL

TO THE

COLOSSIANS.

Introduction.

COLOSSE was a considerable city of Phrygia, and probably not far from Laodicea and Hierapolis; we find these three mentioned together, chap. iv. 13. It is now buried in ruins, and the memory of it chiefly preserved in this epistle. The design of the epistle is to warn them of their danger from the Jewish zealots, who pressed the necessity of observing the ceremonial law; and to fortify them against the mixture of the Gentile philosophy with their Christian principles. He professes a great satisfaction in their steadfastness and constancy, and encourages them to perseverance. It was written about the same time with the epistle to the Ephesians and Philippians, Anno Domini, 64, and in the same place, while he was now prisoner at Rome. He was not idle in his confinement, and the word of God was not bound.

Who planted this church is not said; perhaps Epaphras, (chap. i. 6, 7.) Paul himself appears not yet to have seen them; but what he had heard of them engaged him, as the apostle of the Gentiles, to contribute to their edification.

CHAP. I.—ANNO DOMINI, 64.

The inscription as usual, ver. 1, 2. His thanksgiving to God for what he had heard concerning them; their faith, love, and hope, ver. 3—8. He prays for their knowledge, fruitfulness, and strength, ver. 9—11. Gives them an admirable summary of the Christian doctrine concerning the operation of the Spirit, the person of the Redeemer, the work of redemption, and the preaching of it in the gospel, ver. 12—28.

Verses 1, 2. With his usual introduction the apostle opens his epistle. Paul an apostle of Jesus Christ, by the will of God, appointed to that eminent honour and office by an immediate commission from heaven, and Timotheus our brother, who joins with me in this epistle, to the saints and faithful brethren in Christ, which are at Colosse, who are the living members of his body mystical, and in practice correspond with their holy profession; Grace be unto you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ; may every blessing of pardon, adoption, comfort, strength, perseverance, glory, be your happy portion!

3. [d] We give thanks to God and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, praying always for you, 4. Since we heard of your faith in Christ Jesus, and of the love which ye have to all the saints, 5. Verses 3—11. Though unknown to them in person, yet in heart and affection warmly attached to them, the blessed Paul,

1. Thanks God for the pleasing account which he had heard of them. We give thanks to God, and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, our reconciled and covenant God in him; praying always for you, that you may abide and abound in every thing that is excellent, and blessing God for what he hath already done on your behalf: since we heard of your faith in Christ Jesus, and how cordially you embraced his glorious gospel, and rested firm on him alone for acceptance and salvation: and of the love which ye have to all the saints, the genuine fruit of your faith, and the proof of your unfeigned love to him, whose image they bear; for the hope which is laid up for you in heaven, even the eternal blessedness which God hath prepared and promised, whereof ye heard before in the word of the truth of the gospel: which is come unto you; through the Divine providence it hath been preached among you, as it is in all the world, throughout the Roman empire, and bringeth forth fruit, made effectual by the Divine power to the conversion of men's souls, as it doth also in you produce the most blessed effects, since the day ye heard of it, and knew the grace of God in truth, experimentally made acquainted therewith, receiving the gospel both in the light and in the love of it. As ye also learned of Epaphras, our dear fellow-servant, who is for you a faithful minister of Christ, for to his labours you are singularly indebted; who also declared to us your love in the Spirit, testifying his warm affection toward you, in the report he made of your unfeigned love to Christ and his people, the evidence of the effectual work of God's Spirit in your souls. Note, (1.) The mercies of which others, who are near and dear to us, partake, call for our thankfulness, as well as those which we receive from God ourselves. (2.) It is a mercy, through Divine Providence, to hear the word of the truth of the gospel preached; but the grand matter is to receive it into our hearts, and to know the grace of God in truth. (3.) Wherever divine grace operates effectually, it will be seen in the blessed fruits which are produced thereby. (4.) A faithful minister is an invaluable blessing to any people, and highly are they bound to love and honour him.

2. To his thanksgivings he adds his hearty prayers. For this cause we also, since the day we heard it, do not cease to pray for you, (1.) That ye may be made wise unto salvation, and to desire that ye might be filled with the knowledge of his will, your minds more clearly discerning the riches of his grace, your privileges, and the practice of holiness which thence results, advancing in all wisdom and spiritual understanding: and (2.) Disposed to follow in simplicity the light which God bestows, that ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, adorning your holy profession by a suitable conversation, and desiring to approve yourselves to the great Master, being fruitful, as trees of righteousness, in every good work that is for the glory of God, and the benefit of your brethren; and thus increasing in the knowledge of God. Note, As knowledge is essential to all acceptable service, so the more faithfully we improve the grace given unto us, the more fully shall we be let into the secrets of wisdom. For if any man doeth his will, he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God, John vii. 17. (3.) We pray that ye may be strengthened with all might, in the inner man, for the discharge of every duty, and to resist every enemy of your souls, according to his glorious power, which can support you abundantly, unto all patience and long-suffering with joyfulness; bearing up with cheerfulness under all persecutions or afflictions which may befall you, neither weary nor desponding, but with holy triumph exulting in the grace you have experienced, and the promises of continual help in every time of need. Note, (1.) All our strength must come from above, and is to be obtained in the way of prayer. (2.) Every believer, conflicting with sin and Satan, is a living monument of God's glorious power, and, like the burning bush, though compassed with temptations, is not consumed. (3.) However multiplied, prolonged, or afflictive, our trials may be, we are called to exercise all patience, and neither to murmur nor faint under them; and hard as the work is, God can enable us for that which he doth command, yea, not only to be resigned, but to rejoice in the midst of tribulations.

Verses 12—29. The apostle returns again to thanksgiving.

1. In the view of the inestimable blessings to which they had been admitted. Giving thanks unto the Father, which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light, by his Spirit renewing our hearts, raising up our affections to high and heavenly things, and preparing us for that glory which he hath prepared for us. Note, (1.) Our inheritance is secured to us in Christ, and comes to us by grace, not by desert; he adopts us as children, and then we become heirs of consequence. (2.) All who have this title are educated as becomes the sons of God; and though the inheritance is sure to them in a covenant of promise, they are made meet for the enjoyment of it: and it would be folly and delusion to expect our lot among the saints in light, if we have not our conversation among them here below.

2. He gives thanks to God, who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, plucking us as brands from the burning, rescuing us from the slavery of sin and Satan, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son, admitting us to the inestimable privileges and blessings of that kingdom of light and grace which Jesus came to erect, that we might be brought under his happy government. Note, (1.) We are by nature slaves of sin and Satan, walking in darkness, and liable each moment to rush into eternal darkness. (2.) It is an act of sovereign and amazing grace, when God is pleased to pluck the sinner from this miserable state. (3.) They who are brought into the kingdom of the Son of God's love, will share that love with him, and be made eternally happy thereby.

3. He blesses God for the salvation obtained through Christ; in whom we have redemption through his blood, including not only deliverance from wrath, but the purchased possession in glory; and, as the present earnest thereof, the forgiveness of sins, freely, fully, for ever: so that we stand without fault before the throne of God.

4. He describes the glorious personage to whom we are indebted for pardon, grace, glory, and every blessing; who is the image of the invisible God, one with the Father in essence and perfections, and, as incarnate, appears his visible representative, the first-born of every creature, begotten before the worlds were, or the first-begotten (πρωτοτοκος) of every creature. For by him were all things created that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, from the lowest rank of beings to the highest archangel, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers, by whatever names or titles distinguished, whether in heaven or in earth: all things were created by him, and for him, by his power, and for his glory. And he is before all things, in eternal pre-existence, and by him all things consist, preserved and upheld by his providence and care, as they were spoken into being at his word, And he is the head of the body, in his peculiar character as Mediator, not only as having the dominion over all things, but also as communicating vital influence to the several members, of which the church universal is composed: who is the beginning, the principle of spiritual and eternal life to his people, the first-born from the dead, who rose by his own power, and is the pledge, cause, and first-fruits of our resurrection, that in all things he might have the pre-eminence, exalted far above all creatures, the object of adoration to men and angels, and possessing the first place in their affection and regard. For it pleased the Father, in consequence of the complete redemption which he hath obtained, that in him should all fulness dwell for the use of his church, all fulness of merit, righteousness, graces, gifts, according to their wants, to be freely dispensed to every member of his body mystical. And (having made peace through the blood of his cross) receiving full satisfaction to his justice, by the oblation of the body of Jesus once for all, and now, consistent with his own glory being able to extend mercy to the guilty sinner, it pleased the Father to reconcile all things unto himself, restoring them from their state of enmity to his forfeited regard, in a way as honourable to him, as happy and safe for them; by him, I say, whether they be things on earth, or things in heaven, the members of the church militant here below, or those already entered into rest above. How glorious is the cross of Christ beheld in this delightful view! How justly worthy to be the grand object ever in our view, since to it we are indebted for all we possess here, and all we hope for hereafter!

5. He mentions with delight the particular interest which they, to whom he wrote, possessed in all the blessings of this glorious redemption. And you, that were sometimes utterly alienated from God, and enemies in your mind by wicked works, by nature, by practice, rebels against the divine government, yet now hath he reconciled, in the body of his flesh through death, receiving you into the arms of his mercy, when drawn near to him by faith, through that new and living way which he hath consecrated through the veil of his crucified body, to present you holy, and unblameable, and unreproveable in his sight, because accepted in the beloved: and being found in him, complete in the righteousness which he hath provided, the piercing eye of justice can discern no spot nor wrinkle in you: and this will infallibly be your happy case, both now and for ever, if ye continue in the faith, and really possess what you profess; or, since ye continue in the faith, and have given the strongest proofs of your union with the Lord, grounded and settled on him the true foundation, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel, even that substantial hope, which springs from the perfect atonement, complete righteousness, and all-sufficient grace secured to you in the great Redeemer, which blessed gospel ye have, through peculiar mercy, heard; and which was preached to every creature which is under heaven, as a common salvation, alike free for Gentiles as for Jews, and extending to sinners of every rank and condition. Note, The gospel is grace abounding; none perish because of the greatness of their guilt, but because they reject the only remedy through pride and unbelief, and will not come to Christ, that they might have life.

6. Having mentioned the gospel which was preached unto them, among others who were honoured with the dispensation of it, he humbly inserts his own name: Whereof I, Paul, am made a minister, by special commission on behalf of the Gentiles. Who now rejoice in my sufferings for the glorious truths which I have preached unto them, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh, for his body's sake, which is the church; not that the sufferings of Christ were incomplete, and needed any addition to them in order to obtain the redemption of his people, and make satisfaction to Divine Justice: but as the members of his body are all to go through tribulation to glory, I, who was the instrument of their sufferings formerly, now in turn receive my measure of afflictions, and with holy joy triumph under them, when I have cause to hope his church and people shall be profited thereby: whereof I am made a minister, by a call immediately from heaven, according to the dispensation of God, in settling the economy of his peculiar family, which is given to me for you Gentiles, to fulfil the word of God, which was commanded me, or in correspondence with the prophecies which had foretold your call and conversion; even the mystery which hath been hid from ages, and from generations, that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, but now is made manifest to his saints, his prophets, and apostles, and by them to all the faithful: to whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles, who should be admitted to the participation of all the invaluable privileges of the gospel, the author, purchaser, and dispenser of which is Christ in you, formed in your hearts, by faith, the hope of glory: whom we preach as the only Saviour of the miserable and desperate, warning every man of the mortal danger of sin, and his inevitable ruin out of Christ, and teaching every man in all wisdom concerning the only method of safety, even faith in a crucified Saviour, that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus, complete in him as their head, and growing up to the perfection of knowledge, grace, and holiness, in the day of his appearing and glory: whereunto I also labour, striving with every nerve, in the midst of opposing enemies, according to his working which worketh in me mightily, who enables me for the conflict, and crowns my labours with success.

[e] † In whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge.

Verses 1—3. Though the apostle had no personal knowledge of the Colossians, the report he had heard engaged his warmest affections towards them. For I would that ye knew what great conflict I have for you, how solicitous I am for your welfare, and wrestle earnestly with God in prayer on your behalf, and for them at Laodicea, and for as many as have not seen my face in the flesh: and this especially I ask of the Lord, that their hearts might be comforted under every trial, with those consolations which he bestows on his chosen, being knit together in love to Christ, and one another, and unto all riches of the full assurance of understanding, seeking to attain the most distinct and comprehensive knowledge of the gospel, with all its invaluable privileges, to the acknowledgment of the mystery of God, and of the Father, and of Christ, testifying the fullest approbation of that glorious scheme of salvation, which, though unknown before, is now revealed to the Gentiles, wherein God appears as their reconciled God and Father in Christ, the covenant-head of his redeemed. In whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, for the use of his people, that he might so order all the dispensations of his providence and grace, as most effectually to conduct them safe amidst all their difficulties to his eternal kingdom. Note, (1.) It is God's will that his people should be comforted, and for this his ministers should labour. (2.) Nothing tends more to cause our consolations to abound than the union of our hearts to Jesus, and to our brethren, in love unfeigned. (3.) Whatever remaining ignorance be in us, or darkness surround our steps, he who hath all the treasures of wisdom is our guide, and he will lead us by the right way.

4. And this I say, lest any man should [f] beguile you with enticing words. 5. || Or in himself.

them openly, triumphing over them || in it.

Verses 4—15. The apostle felt the tenderest concern for them, and he testifies it by his jealousy over them.

1. He warns them against the seducing, Judaizing teachers. And this I say, concerning my affection for you, and the all-sufficient wisdom of Jesus to direct you, lest, as Satan beguiled Eve through his subtilty, any man should beguile you with enticing words, perverting you from the simplicity of the gospel, under pretence of leading you to higher attainments. For though I be absent in the flesh, yet am I with you in the spirit; not only united to them in affection, but probably having some extraordinary discernment of their state from the Lord; joying and beholding your order and strict discipline, and the stedfastness of your faith in Christ, notwithstanding all the shocks of persecution or the wiles of deceivers. As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, and made profession of your entire dependence upon him as your Prophet, Priest, and King, so walk ye in him, depending on the teachings of his word and Spirit, trusting on his atonement and righteousness, and desirous to obey his holy will in all things: rooted as the tree, which no winds can blow down, and built up in him, and stablished in the faith, fixed immoveably on the rock of ages, and by faith growing up into him in all things who is the head, even Christ, as ye have been taught in the gospel preached to you; abounding therein with thanksgiving, enriched with all the fulness of divine grace, and ceaseless in praise to the great author of all your hopes and happiness. Beware, therefore, since ye have received the truth as it is in Jesus, lest any man spoil you of the inestimable treasure through philosophy and vain deceit, according to the corrupt systems of heathenism, misleading you from the purity of the gospel, after the tradition of men, whether of Judaizing teachers or Gentile sages, after the rudiments of the world, those first elements, (στοιχεια) contained in the Mosaical economy, and suited only to the infant state of the church, and which are not after Christ, but tend to seduce the heart from him, to direct the soul to rest on something else for salvation, besides his finished work, in whom dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, all the divine perfections being, in their utmost fulness, perpetually resident in the person of the incarnate Jesus. Note, (1.) The discourse set off with the most enticing words, must be brought to the test of God's revealed will, and if it correspond not therewith, whatever appearances of wisdom there may be, it is to be rejected with abhorrence. (2.) They who cleave to Christ shall be preserved from delusion. (3.) He who is God as well as man in one Christ, must needs be able to save to the uttermost, and be the worthy object of our entire faith and dependence.

2. He mentions the complete salvation, of which in Christ, they had been made partakers. And ye are complete in him, in virtue of your union with him, who is made of God unto you wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption, and who is, in his mediatorial character, the head of all principality and power, all in heaven, earth, and hell, from the highest creature to the lowest, being made subject unto him. In whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision, not that which is outward in the flesh, and now of no avail, but that made without hands, even the circumcision of the heart, evident in the putting off the body of the sins of the flesh, and mortifying the old man, which is corrupt, with the affections and lusts, by the circumcision of Christ, which he is the author of, and by his Spirit effects in the hearts of his people. Buried with him by baptism, the ordinance which he hath instituted, superseding circumcision, and signifying to us our death unto sin, and new birth unto righteousness, wherein also ye are risen with him, quickened to newness of life, through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead. The same divine power being needful to produce faith in the heart of the sinner, as to communicate life to the dead body of Jesus. And you being dead in your sins, under the sentence of God's wrath, and separated from his favour, which is the true life of the soul, and in the uncircumcision of your flesh, serving divers lusts and pleasures, under the dominion of a corrupted nature, hath he quickened together with him, to a life of grace here, as the earnest and beginning of a life of glory in eternity, having forgiven you all trespasses, in virtue of the redemption of Jesus. Blotting out the hand-writing of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, by his blood cancelling the debt, and obliterating the bond, discharging us from the condemnation of the moral law, and abolishing the ceremonial, which separated Jews and Gentiles, and was the cause of enmity between them, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross, and rending it in pieces; and having spoiled principalities and powers, the apostate spirits of darkness, he made a show of them openly, as their conqueror, on the tree, triumphing over them in it, and redeeming all his people thereby from their hateful dominion.

How invaluable are the Christian's privileges! How precious should he be to us, who is the blessed author of them! (1.) We are quickened by him from the death of sin. (2.) We have the free and full remission of all our iniquities. (3.) The curse of the law is satisfied, and there is no condemnation to those who are in Christ Jesus. (4.) Our spiritual enemies are vanquished; we need fear nothing from them; our Jesus is triumphant, and he will shortly make us, with himself, more than conquerors.

16. [u] Let no man therefore judge you * in meat, or in drink, or † in respect of an holy-day, or of the new-moon, or of the sabbath-days: 17. Verses 16—23. The apostle, from the foregoing considerations of the complete redemption which in Christ Jesus they had obtained, warns them against the Judaizing zealots.

Let no man therefore judge or condemn you in meat or in drink, or in respect of a holy-day, or of the new-moon, or of the sabbath- days, inculcating the necessity of observing these Jewish ceremonies, in order to salvation: which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ; since he who is the substance of them hath appeared, they are now abolished, and no longer obligatory. Let no man beguile you of your reward, or cheat you of the prize of your high calling in Christ Jesus, in a voluntary humility, leading you to a kind of abasement which the gospel never prescribed, and worshipping of angels, to the great dishonour of the one Mediator between God and man; intruding into those things which he hath not seen, vainly puffed up by his fleshly mind, falsely pretending to what he is ignorant of, and following the delusions of a heart eaten up with pride, and not holding the head, Christ Jesus, from whom alone the whole body of his church, by joints and bonds having nourishment ministered, and knit together, spiritually as the members of the natural body are united to their common head, increaseth with the increase of God, in light, and love, and comfort, and holiness. Wherefore if, or seeing, ye be dead with Christ, as your baptism intimated, from the rudiments of the world, and discharged from all obligation to the Mosaic economy, why as though living in the world, and still under the legal dispensation, are ye subject to ordinances, and obey the dogmatical decisions of Judaizing teachers, who cry, Touch not, taste not, handle not, as if the Levitical law was still in force, and the distinction of meats and drinks to be scrupulously observed by Christians; which meats all perish with the using, passing through the body, and cannot defile the soul; and are now no longer enjoined of divine authority, but merely after the commandments and doctrines of men, by these Jewish zealots? Which things have indeed a shew of wisdom, and pass under the specious pretence of paying to God service, even of supererogation, in will-worship, and voluntary humility, which his word hath never enjoined, and neglecting of the body, by affected austerities, not in any honour; these things are not of any value in the sight of God, but are to the satisfying of the flesh, serving only to foster man's pride, and to flatter him in a vain conceit of his own superior goodness. Note, They who affect to be wise above what is written, will only in the issue expose their own absurd pride and egregious folly.

CHAP. III.—ANNO DOMINI, 64.

The apostle exhorts us to set our hearts upon heaven, and take them off from this world, ver. 1—4. He exhorts to the mortification of sin, in the various instances of it, ver. 5—12. and earnestly presses to mutual love and compassion, ver. 12—17. And concludes with exhortations to relative duties; of wives and husbands, parents and children, masters and servants, ver. 18—25.

1. IF [a] ye then be risen with Christ, [b] seek those things which are above, where [c] Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. 2. [d] Set your * affection on things above, not on things on the earth. 3. For [e] ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. 4. When Christ, who [f] is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also [g] appear with him in glory.

Verses 1—4. The apostle having, in the former chapter, laid down the great fundamental doctrines of Christianity, and the invaluable privileges of true believers, proceeds here to exhort the Colossians to those tempers and practices which became their holy profession.

1. He exhorts them to heavenly-mindedness. If ye then be risen with Christ, in virtue of his resurrection, and of your union with him, seek those things which are above, even the eternal blessedness provided for you in heaven, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God, gone before to prepare a place for you, and ever living to make intercession for you. Therefore set your affection on things above, with faith, hope, and love, aspire after them, realizing them to your mind by frequent meditation and fervent prayer, seeking those influences of grace which may conduct you to the glory which shall be revealed; and not on things on the earth, whether Jewish ordinances, or earthly advantages and allurements; keep these under your feet, be weaned from them and daily dying to them. Note, A worldly mind and a heavenly hope are utterly inconsistent; no man can serve two masters.

2. He supports his exhortation by the most powerful arguments. For ye are dead, by your profession in baptism, and your obligations to a crucified Jesus; and your life is hid with Christ, both your spiritual life, with all its joys, is hid from the natural man, and by secret communications from your exalted head is still maintained till it shall be perfected above; and your eternal life is secured in him according to the secret purposes of God from the beginning; therefore, having such glorious expectations, look up, and live continually under the influence of them. And then, when Christ, who is our life, the author, support, and finisher of it, shall appear in the great day of his second coming, then shall ye also appear with him in glory; and how much then does it behove us to have our affections placed there, where we hope to spend an eternity with Christ in blessedness inconceivable?

5. [n] Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry: 6. [i] For which things' sake the wrath of God cometh on the [k] children of disobedience: 7. [l] In the which ye also walked sometime, when ye lived in them. 8. But now ye also [m] put off all these; anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication out of your mouth. 9. [n] Lie not one to another, seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds; 10. And [o] have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him: [n] 11. [p] Where there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free: but [q] Christ is all, and in all.

Verses 5—11. If we would set our affections on things in heaven, our sensual and earthly affections must be mortified; and hereunto the apostle earnestly exhorts them. Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth, the remaining corruptions that still war against you; such as fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, with every thought, word, or action, that hath the remotest tendency to excite impure desire, and covetousness, with every worldly lust, which is idolatry, as it engages the heart to the creature, drawing it off from the love and service of the Creator; for which things' sake the wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience, and the consequences of these sins will infallibly be eternal death. In the which ye also, as other Gentiles, walked sometime, when ye lived in them. But now, since the light and grace of the blessed gospel hath reached you, ye also put off all these; anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, speaking reproachfully of God or things sacred, or whatever would blast the reputation of others: and let no filthy communication, or immodest expression, proceed out of your mouth. Lie not one to another, but ever, in all your conversation, speak the truth from your heart, and be faithful to every promise and engagement, seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds, the native corruption which came with you into the world, and works to bring forth fruit unto death, till subdued by the power of divine grace; and ye have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him, the heart, by the powerful operations of the Spirit, being renewed after the likeness of Jesus the Creator, in light and holiness, and his image defaced by the fall being now restored by efficacious grace. Where, in this new creation, there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, barbarian, Scythian, bond, nor free, all distinction of nations, names, conditions, and external privileges, is now abolished: but Christ is all in all; in him, all who believe, are complete; he is all to them in wisdom; they need no other teacher; all in righteousness; they want no commendation to God's favour but being found in him; all in sanctification, their whole sufficiency being derived from him, as the fountain of grace; all in redemption, as he hath by one oblation perfected for ever his people, and obtained, purely on account of what he hath done for them, all blessings in time and eternity. Note, (1.) We must mortify sin, or sin will eternally destroy us. (2.) Nothing is more dangerous than fleshly lusts, which war against the soul, unless it be the corroding canker of covetousness, which, though it may less shock the conscience, is as fatally ruinous to the soul. (3.) The longer we have lived in sin, the more urgently are we called to awake to newness of life: the time past may surely suffice to have wrought the will of the flesh. (4.) Anger, malice, slander, and lies, are the strongest lineaments of him who was a liar and murderer from the beginning. (5.) If we belong to Christ, we must prove it by the conformity of our temper and conduct to his; he that abideth in him, ought himself to walk as Christ also walked. (6.) If Christ be to us all in all, then are we bound to ascribe to him the glory of all our salvation.

12. [r] Put on therefore, as the [s] elect of God, holy and beloved, [t] bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long-suffering; 13. [u] Forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a † quarrel against any: even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye. 14. And [x] above all these things, put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness. 15. And let [y] the peace of God rule in your hearts, to the which also ye are called in one body; and be ye thankful. 16. [z] Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; [a] teaching and admonishing one another in [b] psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord. 17. And [c] whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him.

Verses 12—17. The apostle proceeds to enforce the practice of all godliness upon them, as those who were chosen in Christ Jesus, as the elect of God, ordained to be holy, and being beloved by him, should approve themselves before him.

1. Put on therefore bowels of mercies, such as were in Jesus Christ, towards the miserable and afflicted; kindness in every word and deed; humbleness of mind, lowly in your own thoughts of yourselves, and condescending to others; meekness, quietly submitting to the dispensations of Providence, and enduring patiently every reproach and indignity; long-suffering under repeated and aggravated provocations; forbearing one another under your several infirmities, and forgiving one another every offence or injury, if any man have a quarrel against any; even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye, whose amazing grace to us should powerfully engage our hearts to pass by each other's transgressions, and not only to forgive, but to blot out of our remembrance every past offence. And,

2. Above all these things, as that which is most singularly necessary, or over all these things, as what sets them off in their brightest lustre, put on charity, that divine principle of all that is excellent, which is the bond of perfectness, uniting the whole body of the church together, and most effectual to preserve them until they arrive at the perfection of holiness and happiness.

3. And let the God of peace rule in your hearts; being at peace with him, carefully cultivate peace with each other, and let a sense of his reconciliation to you sway your hearts to mutual love and forbearance, to the which also ye are called in one body as together united to Christ your common head: and be ye thankful for this invaluable blessing.

4. Let the word of Christ, his blessed gospel, dwell in you richly, abiding in your hearts, the subject of your constant meditations, and delightful converse; esteem it as your most invaluable treasure, and store up the knowledge of it in your hearts, in all wisdom, ready for use on every proper occasion.

5. As united in love, be teaching and admonishing one another in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord, building up each other thus in our most holy faith, and helping forward your mutual joy in God, and his blessed service. Note, It is not the music of the voice, but the singing with grace in the heart which is the acceptable praise.

6. And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, under the influence of his grace, with a regard to his will, and a single eye to his glory, expecting the acceptance of every service for his sake alone, giving thanks to God, even the Father by him, in whom our praises and prayers come up before the throne as sacrifices of a sweet smell. Note, A Christian can never want matter of praise, whenever he turns his thoughts toward the Lord Jesus.

18. [d] Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as it is fit in the Lord. 19. [e] Husbands, love your wives, and be not bitter against them. 20. [f] Children, obey your parents in [g] all things: for this is well pleasing unto the Lord. 21. [h] Fathers, provoke not your children to anger, lest they be discouraged. 22. Verses 18—25. The apostle passes on to inculcate the due discharge of the great relative duties, and he begins, as before, (Eph. v. 22.) with the inferior relation, as subjection is peculiarly hard for creatures, who are naturally under the power of a spirit of pride and independence. We have,

1. The duty of wives. Submit yourselves unto your own husbands; be under their government, as it is fit in the Lord, according to the law of creation, and the divine constitution; obedient in all things which are not immediately inconsistent with your duty to the Lord Jesus.

2. The duty of husbands. Love your wives with all tenderness and singleness of affection, delighting in their company, and studying to make them happy in their relation to you; and be not bitter against them, cross, hasty, arbitrary, severe, with frowns or wrath, or ill usage, making their yoke heavy.

3. The duty of children. Obey your parents in all things that are lawful, neither murmuring nor disputing against their commands, or disposals: for this is well-pleasing unto the Lord, and a happy proof of your relation to the Father of Mercies.

4. The duty of parents. Fathers, provoke not your children to anger, by needless severities, arbitrary restraints, harsh commands, and unreasonable impositions, lest they be discouraged, their spirits broken with such treatment, and, through despair of pleasing, they should desist even from the attempt.

5. The duty of servants. Obey in all things your masters according to the flesh, whether Gentile or Christian, diligent to observe all their just commands, not with eye-service, as men-pleasers, merely whilst they are looking on you, but in singleness of heart, fearing God, and equally faithful in the discharge of your duty when no eye seeth you but His, to whom it is your special care to approve yourselves: and whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, working with all willingness and assiduity, as to the Lord, for his glory, and not unto men, merely with a view to their applause; knowing that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of the inheritance, when the great Master shall appear to recompense the fidelity of his servants, in whatever condition or rank they have been placed by him: for ye serve the Lord Christ, and whatsoever service ye do to them, with a view to his honour, he will regard it as immediately rendered to himself, and reward it accordingly. But he that doeth wrong to his master, by fraud, connivance, sloth, or negligence, shall receive for the wrong which he hath done the punishment due to his injustice; and there is no respect of persons with God; the meanest, at his bar, being accountable as well as the greatest, and shall receive sentence according to their deeds.

CHAP. IV.—ANNO DOMINI, 64.

He continues his account of the duty of masters, from the close of the former chapter, ver. 1. Exhorts to the duty of prayer, ver. 2—4. And to a prudent and decent carriage towards those with whom we converse, ver. 5, 6. Closes the epistle with the mention of several of his friends, of whom he gives an honourable testimony, ver. 7—18.

1. MASTERS,[a] give unto your servants that which is just and equal; knowing that ye also have a master [b] in heaven.

Verse 1. This verse should most properly have closed the foregoing chapter, as it contains the duty of masters. Give unto your servants that which is just and equal, not treating them tyrannically, nor laying on them unreasonable burdens, but using them kindly, giving them proper provisions, paying them their wages punctually, according to agreement, and as much as they really deserve, knowing that ye also have a Master in heaven, to whom you are responsible, and who regardeth the person of the rich no more than the poor.

2. [c] Continue in prayer, and watch in the same with thanksgiving, 3. [d] Withal, praying also for us, that God would open unto us a door of utterance, to speak the [e] mystery of Christ, [f] for which I am also in bonds: 4. That I may make it manifest, [g] as I ought to speak. 5. [h] Walk in wisdom toward them that are without, redeeming the time. 6. [i] Let your speech be alway with grace, seasoned with salt, that ye may know how ye ought to answer every man.

Verses 2—6. The apostle, having laid down the particular duties of each station, proceeds to those that more generally belong to all the members of Christ's church. He exhorts them,

1. To unceasing prayer. Continue in prayer daily, at stated seasons, and habitually in your mind disposed to look up to God, and watch in the same with thanksgiving, engaged in the service with warm affections, and intenseness of mind, blessing and praising God for his goodness continually: withal, praying also for us, that God would open unto us a door of utterance, and give us both opportunity and ability to speak the mystery of Christ, his rich, free, and boundless grace, revealed to Gentiles as well as Jews, for maintaining which I am also now in bonds: that I may make it manifest, as I ought to speak, plainly and without reserve, maintaining the equality of the Gentiles respecting all the privileges of the gospel, and keeping back nothing of all the counsel of God, as becomes a faithful ambassador of Christ. Note, Ministers need their people's prayers, and should be constantly remembered by them in the view of their arduous work.

2. To a becoming carriage towards those who are as yet out of the pale of the church. Walk in wisdom towards them that are without, with all prudence and circumspection, giving them no just occasion of offence, guarding against all fellowship with them in what is evil, whilst ready to every good word and work to do them service; redeeming the time, desiring to improve every opportunity of converse with them for their benefit, and careful to avoid whatever might unnecessarily provoke their malice and persecution, and be the means to cut you off from life and usefulness.

3. Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt, edifying, discreet, and savoury, the proof of true grace in your own hearts, and the means of communicating it to others, that ye may know how ye ought to answer every man, whether the serious inquiries of those who desire instruction, the doubts of the scrupulous, or the cavils of adversaries.

7. [k] All my state shall Tychicus declare unto you, who is [l] a beloved brother, and a faithful minister and fellow-servant in the Lord. 8. Whom [m] I have sent unto you for the same purpose, that he might know your estate, and comfort your hearts; 9. With [n] Onesimus, a faithful and beloved brother, who is one of you. They shall make known unto you all things which are done here. 10. [o] Aristarchus, my fellow-prisoner, saluteth you; and Marcus, sister's son to Barnabas, (touching whom ye received commandments: if he come unto you, [p] receive him;) 11. And Jesus, which is called Justus, who are of the circumcision. These only are my [q] fellow-workers unto the kingdom of God, which have been a comfort unto me. 12. [r] Epaphras, who is one of you, a servant of Christ, saluteth you, [s] always * labouring fervently for you in prayers, that ye may stand [t] perfect and † complete in all the will of God. 13. [u] For I bear him record that he hath a great zeal for you, and them that are in [x] Laodicea, and them in Hierapolis. 14. [y] Luke, the beloved physician, and Demas, greet you. 15. Salute the brethren which are in Laodicea, and Nymphas, and [z] the church which is in his house. 16. And when this epistle is read among you, [a] cause that it be read also in the church of the Laodiceans; and that ye likewise read the epistle from Laodicea. 17. And say to [b] Archippus, [c] Take heed to the ministry which thou hast received in the Lord, that thou fulfil it. 18. The salutation [d] by the hand of me Paul. [e] Remember my bonds. [f] Grace be with you. Amen.

Verses 7—18. The apostle closes his epistle with the commendation and respectful mention of several of his brethren, who joined in salutations with him.

1. Tychicus. All my state shall Tychicus declare unto you, the bearer of this epistle, who will give you a faithful account of my affairs, sufferings, success, and is a beloved brother in the gospel, and a faithful minister, proved by long experience, and fellow-servant with me in the Lord, to promote the interests of his cause and kingdom: whom I have sent unto you for the same purpose, that he might know your estate, and bring me word how you fare and prosper, and comfort your hearts under all your trials and sufferings for the sake of Christ and his gospel.

2. Onesimus. With Onesimus, Tychicus' companion, a faithful and beloved brother, who is one of you, and now far different from the man who formerly fled his master's service. (See the epistle to Philemon.) They shall make known unto you all things which are done here, for your comfort and encouragement, who cannot but rejoice to hear what supports I receive, and what a blessing is on my bonds.

3. Aristarchus, my fellow-prisoner, saluteth you, and Marcus, sister's son to Barnabas, (touching whom ye received commandments; if he come unto you, receive him.) It appears hereby that though Mark was once under the apostle's displeasure, he was now restored to his good graces; and, having acknowledged his fault, had been heartily forgiven, and cordially received again. And Jesus, which is called Justus, who are of the circumcision, these only of the Jewish brethren are my fellow-workers unto the kingdom of God, which have been a comfort unto me under my sufferings.

4. Epaphras, who is one of you, a servant of Jesus Christ in the gospel, saluteth you, always labouring fervently for you in prayers, as in an agony wrestling with God for a blessing upon your souls, that ye may stand perfect and complete in all the will of God, enlightened with the clearest discoveries of divine truth, and steadfast in the practice of all holiness. For I bear him record, that he hath a great zeal for you, and them that are in Laodicea, and them in Hierapolis. Probably this faithful servant of Jesus had been chiefly instrumental in planting these churches, and therefore bore them a very particular affection. Note, (1.) Those whom we have begotten in the gospel, we shall not fail earnestly to commend to God's keeping and care; zeal for them will make our prayers importunate. (2.) Though we come however short of the mark at which we aim, perfection complete and entire is that which the Christian seeks as the summit of his felicity.

5. Luke, the beloved physician, by profession a physician for the body, but who now dispenses in the gospel healing for the soul, and Demas greet you, wishing you the richest mercies of our God.

6. Salute the brethren which are in Laodicea, and Nymphas, and the church which is in his house. Probably there the faithful assembled for their stated worship; or his family, remarkable for their regularity, exemplariness, and daily worship of God, appeared a little church within themselves. And when this epistle is read among you, cause that it be read also in the churches of the Laodiceans; and that ye likewise read the epistle from Laodicea, either that which was written from thence by the apostle, as some suggest, to Timothy, or rather an epistle from the church of the Laodiceans to the Colossians, which might contain matter of great edification. Note, Religious letters are often singularly useful.

7. And say to Archippus, their bishop probably, who had need be peculiarly watchful over the flock, when seducers so abounded, Take heed to the ministry which thou hast received in the Lord, to fulfil it with all zeal and fidelity, maintaining the doctrines of grace against all opposers, and adorning them in his conversation, building up the souls committed to his care in the true faith of the gospel, labouring earnestly for the edification of the saints, and for the conversion of sinners. Note, They who are put in trust with the ministry, have a peculiarly important charge committed to them; and, if they grow cold and careless, their people may and ought, with becoming respect, to admonish them of their negligence.

8. He concludes with his benediction and subscription. The salutation by the hand of me Paul, the mark of his genuine epistles. Remember my bonds, which I now suffer for the sake of the Gentiles, and which should especially engage your prayers for me, and your affection towards me. Grace be with you; may the sovereign and rich favour of God, with all its blessed consequences, be your present and everlasting portion. Amen!

A PRACTICAL COMMENT

UPON THE

FIRST EPISTLE OF ST PAUL

TO THE

THESSALONIANS.

Introduction.

THESSALONICA was formerly the metropolis of Macedonia; it is now called Salonichi, and is the best peopled, and one of the best towns for commerce in the Levant. The apostle Paul, being diverted from his design of going into the provinces of Asia, properly so called, and directed after an extraordinary manner to preach the gospel in Macedonia, Acts xvi. 9, 10. in obedience to the call of God went from Tarsus to Samothracia, and from thence to Neapolis, and from thence to Philippi, where he had good success in his ministry; but met with hard usage, being cast into prison, with Silas his companion in travel and labour; from whence being wonderfully delivered, they comforted the brethren there and departed. Passing through Amphipolis and Apollonia, they came to Thessalonica, where the apostle planted a church that consisted of some believing Jews, and many converted Gentiles, Acts xvii. 1—4. But a tumult being raised in the city by the unbelieving Jews, and the lewd and baser sort of the inhabitants, Paul and Silas, for their safety, were sent away by night into Berea: and afterwards Paul was conducted to Athens, leaving Silas and Timotheus behind him, but sent directions that they should come to him with all speed.

When they were come, Timotheus was sent to Thessalonica to inquire after their welfare, and to establish them in the faith, 1 Thes. iii. 2. who returned to Paul while he tarried at Athens, and was sent again, together with Silas, to visit the churches in Macedonia. So that Paul, being left at Athens alone, 1 Thes. iii. 2. departed from thence to Corinth, where he continued a year and a half; in which time Silas and Timotheus returned to him from Macedonia, Acts xiii. 5. and then he wrote this epistle to the church of Christ at Thessalonica; which, though it is placed after the other epistles of this apostle, is supposed to be first in time of all Paul's epistles, and to be written about A. D. 54.

The main scope whereof is to express the thankfulness of this apostle for the good success his preaching had among them, and to establish them in the faith, and persuade them to a holy conversation.

Verse 1. The apostle begins with his usual address, joining two of his brethren with himself. Paul, and Silvanus, and Timotheus, unto the church of the Thessalonians, which is in God the Father, and in the Lord Jesus Christ, called to the worship of the true God, chosen in Christ Jesus, and united to him by faith as living members of his body: grace be unto you, and peace, from God the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ; may all the blessings of the everlasting covenant of redemption be your portion, partaking of the boundless grace of God, and enjoying that sweetest peace of conscience which results from a sense of his unchangeable love!

Verses 2—5. With thanksgiving and prayer the apostle on their behalf approached a throne of grace. We give thanks to God always for you all, making mention of you in our prayers.

1. Remembering, without ceasing, (1.) your work of faith, which is proved to be unfeigned by the blessed effects it produces on your hearts and lives. And, (2.) Your labour of love, love to Jesus and one another engaging you to every good word and work, and making you willing to submit to any hardships, for his glory and the advantage of your brethren. And also, (3.) Your patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, even that lively hope which faith in him inspires, and which strengthens you with patient perseverance to endure under every cross, in the sight of God and our Father, to whom we can appeal for our constant and thankful remembrance of you, and trust that in all fidelity you approve yourselves to him: knowing, brethren beloved, your election of God, the objects of his eternal regard, and of his mere sovereign pleasure chosen to grace here and glory hereafter. Note, (1.) All our blessings flow from God's election. We have not chosen him, but he hath chosen us. (2.) Those whom God chooses for his own he sanctifies, and prepares for the inheritance which he hath prepared for them.

2. He thanks God for the success of his preaching among them. For our gospel came not unto you in word only, to your ear, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, who bore his attestation to the truth by miracles, accompanied it with divine evidence to the conscience, and caused it to enter into your hearts with much assurance of your personal interest in the promised blessings: as ye know what manner of men we were among you for your sake, with what patience and perseverance, in the midst of much persecution, we delivered our message, zealous for your souls; and how God was pleased graciously to own our labours. Note, (1.) Nothing fills a faithful minister's heart with deeper gratitude, than the beholding the success of his labours. (2.) Wherever the gospel is made effectual to the heart by the Holy Ghost, it comes with such evidence as bears down all objections, and powerfully bends the soul to the obedience of the faith.

6. And ye [l] became followers of us, and of the Lord, [m] having received the word in much affliction, with joy of the Holy Ghost: 7. So that ye were [n] ensamples to all that believe in Macedonia and Achaia. 8. For from you [o] sounded out the word of the Lord [p] not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but also in every place your faith to God-ward is spread abroad; so that we need not to speak any thing. 9. For they themselves shew of us [q] what manner of entering in we had unto you, and how [r] ye turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God. 10. And [s] to wait for his Son from heaven, [t] whom he raised from the dead, even [u] Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath to come.

Verses 6—10. The apostle describes the happy effects which the gospel produced among them.

1. Ye became followers of us in faith, patience, and sufferings, and of the Lord Jesus, the perfect pattern which we desire to imitate; having received the word in much affliction: far from being stumbled at the persecution which was raised against us, or being discouraged, ye were filled with joy in the Holy Ghost: and, as your tribulations abounded, your consolations by Jesus Christ abounded also.

2. Ye were eminently distinguished by your conduct on that occasion, so that ye were ensamples of courage, constancy, and zeal, to all that believe in Macedonia and Achaia; for from you sounded out the word of the Lord, the fame of your faith and the remarkable success of the gospel among you went forth; not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but also in every place your faith God-ward is spread abroad and much spoken of, so that we need not to speak any thing in your commendation; for they themselves, among whom this good report of you is spread, show of us, what manner of entering in we had unto you, and need not our information, having been already made acquainted with all the circumstances; and how ye turned to God from idols, to serve the living and true God, who alone hath life in himself, and is the author thereof to all his creatures, and besides whom there is no God; and to wait for his Son from heaven, in faith and hope, whom he raised from the dead for our justification, even Jesus, the complete Saviour of his people, which delivered us from the wrath to come, and but for him we must all have perished eternally. Note, (1.) Good examples are mightily influential. (2.) Wherever the true grace of God comes, it will turn the heart from all its sinful pursuits, and from idols, to cleave to him in faith and love alone. (3.) We owe it to the Son of God that we are rescued from everlasting burnings. Had he not interposed on our behalf, our estate had been desperate as that of the devils themselves. (4.) They who are partakers of the gospel salvation, constantly keep in mind the second coming of the Lord, waiting with desire his appearing, and making it their labour and prayer to be ready to meet him in the clouds.

In this chapter the apostle puts the Thessalonians in mind of the manner of his preaching among them, ver. 1—6. Then of the manner of his conversation among them, ver. 7—12. Afterwards of the success of his ministry, with the effects both on himself and themselves, ver. 13—16. And then apologizeth for his absence, ver. 17—20.

1. FOR yourselves, brethren, know [a] our entrance in unto you, that it was not in vain: 2. [d] For our exhortation was not of deceit, nor of uncleanness, nor in guile: 4. But [e] as we were allowed of God to be put in trust with the gospel,

Verses 1—12. The apostle reminds the Thessalonians,

1. Of his manner of preaching among them. For yourselves, brethren, know our entrance in unto you, that it was not in vain, with great swelling words of vanity, or empty ineffectual harangues, but with the power of the gospel, and the mighty word of truth. But even after we had suffered before, and were shamefully entreated, as ye know, at Philippi, undismayed at the persecutions that we had endured, we were bold in our God to speak unto you the gospel of God with much contention, as in an agony, labouring after your conversion amidst all the opposition which we had to encounter. For our exhortation was not of deceit, we broached no false doctrine, nor had any intention to deceive; nor of uncleanness, but tending to discourage all manner of impurity; nor of guile, for we spoke the truth from the heart; but as we were allowed of God to be put in trust with the gospel, and had this honour conferred upon us to be appointed his ambassadors, even so we speak, under a sense of the weighty charge committed to us; not as pleasing men, but God, which trieth our hearts, to whom we study to approve ourselves in simplicity and godly sincerity: for neither at any time used we flattering words, in order to insinuate and ingratiate ourselves into your confidence, or to encourage you with the least imagination of impunity in your sins; as ye know; nor did we put on a cloak of religion to conceal our designs of covetousness, in order to make an advantage of you; God is witness to the uprightness of our hearts respecting you. Nor of men sought we glory, neither of you, nor yet of others, desiring human applause or esteem, when we might have been burdensome, and demanded our maintenance of you, as the apostles of Christ.

2. Of his conduct and conversation among them. But we were gentle among you, even as a nurse cherisheth her children, with the greatest tenderness; so being affectionately desirous of you, of your happiness and salvation, we were willing to have imparted unto you, not the gospel of God only, but also our own souls, ready to spend and be spent in the service of your faith, because ye were dear unto us. For ye remember, brethren, our labours and travail: for labouring night and day, with our own hands, to earn our maintenance, because we would not be chargeable unto any of you, we preached unto you the gospel of God freely. Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily, and justly, and unblameably, we behaved ourselves among you that believe, conscientiously discharging every duty of religion towards God, and righteousness towards men: as ye know how we exhorted, and comforted, and charged every one of you, as a father doth his children, with the affection and authority of the kindest parent, that ye would walk worthy of God, who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory, to the blessings of his grace in time, and of his glory in eternity. Note, (1.) They can speak boldly, who can appeal to their own conduct for the example of what they teach. (2.) The more love and tenderness accompanies our exhortations, the more effectual are they likely to prove. (3.) They who are called to God's kingdom are bound to walk worthy their high vocation, and to adorn the doctrine of Christ which they profess in all things.

13. For this cause also [s] thank we God without ceasing; because, when [t] ye received the word of God, which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but, as it is in truth, the word of God, which [u] effectually worketh also in you that believe. 14. For ye, brethren, [x] became followers of the churches of God which in Judea are in Christ Jesus: for ye also have suffered like things of your own countrymen, even as they have of the Jews: 15. [y] Who both killed the Lord Jesus, and their own prophets, and have † persecuted us; and they please not God, and are contrary to all men: 16. [z] Forbidding us to speak to the Gentiles that they might be saved, [a] to fill up their sins alway: for the wrath is come upon them to the uttermost.

Verses 13—16. The apostle proceeds,

1. To thank God for their ready reception of the gospel word. For this cause also thank we God without ceasing, because when ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of man, which may be fallacious, or at best of uncertain authority, but, as it is in truth, the word of God, and as such, deserving the deepest reverence, attention, and obedience; which effectually worketh also in you that believe, producing the most blessed consequences, in carrying with it the evidences of its divine original. Note, (1.) Though the treasure of God's word is committed to earthen vessels, its excellence is not therefore the less; and we must remember not who dispenses it, but whose word it is, that with reverence and godly fear we may hear and obey. (2.) Wherever the gospel is received into the heart, it works effectually to the salvation of the soul, casting the whole man into its blessed mould.

2. They were honoured with the cross, and bore it most exemplary. For ye, brethren, became followers of the churches of God, which in Judea are in Christ Jesus; for ye also have suffered like things of your own countrymen, even as they have of the Jews, and sustained the shock of persecution with the same unshaken fortitude and unwearied patience.

3. He mentions with horror the dreadful guilt and rooted enmity of the Jewish zealots; his and their chief opponents, who both killed the Lord Jesus, with most atrocious wickedness imbruing their hands in his sacred blood, and murdered their own prophets, and have, with the utmost virulence, persecuted us, his apostles; and they please not God, though they flatter themselves they are his only favourites; they act in direct opposition to his will, and are contrary to all men, abhorring both Gentiles and Christians, and filled with implacable malice against those who use any means for the conversion of the heathen to Christ; forbidding us to speak to the Gentiles the gospel of God's grace that they might be saved, to fill up the measure of their sins alway, and to hasten the full vials of God's vengeance upon their devoted heads; for the wrath is come upon them, and hath begun to seize them in their rejection of God, and will be poured out to the uttermost or to the end, in the entire destruction of their city, nation, and temple, and in the eternal perdition of the impenitent. Note, When the sinner's iniquities are at the full, then wrath cometh to the uttermost.

17. But we, brethren, being taken from you for a short time [b] in presence, not in heart, [c] endeavoured the more abundantly to see your face with great desire. 18. Wherefore we would have come unto you (even I Paul) once and again; but [d] Satan hindered us. 19. For what is [e] our hope, or joy, or crown of ‡ rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming? 20. For ye are our glory and joy.

Verses 17—20. The apostle,

1. Excuses his absence, which was not voluntary, but through unavoidable hindrances. But we, brethren, being taken from you for a short time in presence, not in heart, and compelled reluctantly to leave you as helpless orphans, endeavoured the more abundantly to see your face with great desire, longing to converse with you, and build up your souls on the true foundation. Wherefore we would have come unto you (even I Paul) once and again, and made efforts for that purpose: but Satan hindered us, sowing such dissensions and raising such difficulties as made our abode in these parts, where we now are, absolutely necessary. Note, We have a busy enemy, who is ever seeking to lay obstacles in our way. We need therefore to watch against his devices and to resist his wiles.

2. He assures them of his high affection and regard for them. For what is our hope in our labours, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? what revives, animates, and comforts our souls under all our work and sufferings? are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming? Yes, verily. For ye are our glory and joy, whilst, looking forward to the great day of Christ's appearing, we confidently hope to present you before him as the happy fruits of our labour, to your eternal blessedness, and to our own immortal honour.

CHAP. III.—ANNO DOMINI, 54.

In this chapter the apostle giveth further evidence of his love to the Thessalonians, reminding them of his sending Timothy to them, with the mention of his design therein, and his inducements so to do, ver. 1—5. By acquainting them of his great satisfaction at the return of Timothy, with good tidings concerning them, ver. 6—10. And concludeth with fervent prayer for them, ver. 11. to the end.

1. WHEREFORE, [a] when we could no longer forbear, we thought it good to be left at Athens alone; 2. And sent [b] Timotheus, our brother, and minister of God, and our fellow-labourer in the gospel of Christ, to establish you, and to comfort you concerning your faith: 3. [c] That no man should be moved by these afflictions: for yourselves know that [d] we are appointed thereunto. 4. For verily, when we were with you, we told you before that we should suffer tribulation; [e] even as it came to pass, and ye know. 5. For this cause, [f] when I could no longer forbear, I sent to know your faith, [g] lest by some means the tempter have tempted you, and our labour be in vain.

Verses 1—5. The solicitude which the apostle felt towards them engaged him to send Timothy and be left alone at Athens, however useful or comfortable such a friend at that time might be to him. Wherefore, when we could no longer forbear, so anxious I was to hear of your affairs, we thought it good to be left at Athens alone; and sent Timotheus our brother and minister of God, and our fellow-labourer in the gospel of Christ; and this in order to establish you in the truth, to build you up in the glorious doctrines of the gospel of Jesus, and to comfort you concerning your faith, exhorting you to abide unshaken in your profession, and suggesting the most encouraging motives thereto; that no man should be moved by these afflictions; for yourselves know that we are appointed thereunto, according to God's eternal counsels, for wise and holy purposes of his own glory. For verily, when we were with you, we concealed nothing from you, but told you plainly before the persecutions came, that we should suffer tribulation; even as it came to pass, and ye know. For this cause when I could no longer forbear, reflecting upon your very critical and trying circumstances, I sent to know your faith, lest by some means the tempter should have tempted you to turn back from the profession of Christ, and our labour be in vain, notwithstanding all the promising appearances which emboldened my confident hope in your fidelity. Note, (1.) We must count the cost, before we enlist under Christ's banner. All that will live godly in him shall suffer persecution. (2.) The devil usually seeks to discourage new converts by the violent opposition which he raises against them. (3.) Faithful ministers labour to confirm the faith and comfort the hearts of those who are suffering for righteousness' sake. In this way only can we hope to enter into the kingdom of God.

6. But now, when [h] Timotheus came from you unto us, and brought us good tidings of your faith and charity, and that ye have good remembrance of us always, desiring greatly to see us, as we also to see you: 7. Therefore, brethren, [i] we were comforted over you in all our affliction and distress by your faith: 8. For [k] now we live, if ye stand fast in the

Verses 6—13. The apostle,

1. Expresses the vast satisfaction which he felt at Timothy's report. But now, when Timotheus came from you unto us, and brought us good tidings of your unshaken faith in Christ, and fervent charity towards each other; and that ye have good remembrance of us always, desiring greatly to see us, as we also to see you; therefore, brethren, we are comforted, and all my anxious fears gave place to holy joy in and over you, in all our affliction and distress, which we were here suffering when Timotheus arrived: but which were now made light and easy, by the knowledge of your faith in Jesus, and fidelity to his cause; for now we live, and are happy in the midst of all our persecutions and dangers, if, or seeing ye stand fast in the Lord, and are not moved away from the hope of the gospel. Note, Nothing is such an encouragement to suffer for Christ and his gospel, as seeing the happy effects of our labours upon those among whom we minister.

2. The glad news filled him with thankfulness to God, and opened his heart and lips in prayer. For what thanks can we render to God again for you, or how sufficiently express our gratitude, for all the joy wherewith we joy for your sakes before our God, night and day praying exceedingly, with unusual fervour and vehemence, that, if the Lord so pleased, we might see your face again, and might perfect that which is lacking in your faith? helping you to farther and clearer discoveries of the gospel, and leading you to fuller and more assured confidence in the Lord. Note, (1.) The strongest believers need still to have their faith increased. (2.) The ministry of the word is the great means which God usually blesses for that happy purpose.

3. He tells them what was the constant subject of his prayers for them. Now God himself and our Father, who as God hath all power to supply every want of his people, and, as our reconciled God and Father, is in the fulness of his love and grace disposed most tenderly towards us; and our Lord Jesus Christ, who is equally with the Father the object of our prayers, and through whose mediation we receive an answer of peace, direct our way unto you, and in his providence enable us to accomplish the purposes we have formed. And the Lord make you to increase and abound in love towards one another, and towards all men, even as we do towards you, advancing to higher attainments in this godlike temper; to the end that he may stablish your hearts in faith and love, unblameable in holiness before God, even our Father, approving yourselves to him in all simplicity and godly sincerity, and acknowledged by him as his chosen at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ to judgment, with all his saints, who in that day shall stand before his throne and share his triumphs.

Note, (1.) Though we may purpose our goings, the Lord alone directeth our steps. (2.) An increase in love is the best symptom of the flourishing state of the Christian's soul. (3.) All God's people desire to be found unblameable in holiness before him, and so to walk as to please him well in all things. (4.) It is God alone by his grace who can make us such as he would have us to be: therefore to him must we, without ceasing, direct our prayer. (5.) The Lord Jesus shall quickly come in glory with all his saints. Happy the soul that shall then have boldness in his presence.

CHAP. IV.—ANNO DOMINI, 54.

In this chapter the apostle gives earnest exhortations to abound in holiness, with a caution against uncleanness, enforced with several arguments, ver. 1—8. He then mentions the great duties of brotherly love, and quietness, with industry, in our callings, ver. 9—12. and concludeth with comforting them that mourned for their relations and friends that died in the Lord, ver. 13—18.

1. FURTHERMORE then [a] we * beseech you, brethren, and † exhort you by the Lord Jesus, that [b] as ye have received of us how ye ought to walk and to please God, [c] so ye would abound more and more. 2. For ye know [d] what commandments we gave you by the Lord Jesus. 3. [e] For this is the will of God, even your sanctification, that ye should abstain from fornication: 4. That every one of you should know how to [f] possess his vessel in sanctification and honour; 5. [g] Not in the lust of concupiscence, even as the Gentiles who know not God; 6. That no man [h] go beyond and ‡defraud his brother || in any matter: because that [i] the Lord is the avenger of all such, as we also have forewarned you and testified. 7. For [k] God hath not called us unto uncleanness, but unto holiness. 8. He therefore that * despiseth, [l] despiseth not man, but God, who [m] hath also given unto us his Holy Spirit.

Verses 1—8. We have here,

1. An exhortation to all holy obedience. Furthermore then we beseech you, brethren, and exhort you by the Lord Jesus, in his name and by his authority, that as ye have received of us how ye ought to walk, and to please God, so ye would abound more and more, with greater watchfulness, diligence, and zeal, according to God's holy word. For ye know what commandments we gave you by the Lord Jesus, so clearly that none can plead ignorance, and urged upon your consciences with those most powerful arguments which should engage your obedience thereunto. Note, (1.) The more clearly the path of duty is marked out to us, the more steadily are we bound to walk in it. (2.) The best come very short of perfection, and have need to be exhorted to greater diligence and exemplariness in their walk and conversation.

2. A caution against all impurity, as most opposite to the Christian character. For this is the will of God, even your sanctification, that you should be in heart and conduct obedient to all his commands; particularly, that ye should abstain from fornication, that common sin among the Gentiles, and to which in the days of your unregeneracy you may have been addicted; that every one of you should know how to possess his vessel, his body, in sanctification and honour, with such purity and chastity as never to be guilty of an action unworthy those who are the temples of the Holy Ghost, and that would defile and disgrace you in the sight of God and every real Christian; not in the lust of concupiscence, indulging the vile affections of the natural heart, even as the Gentiles do, who know not God; that no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter, not only abstaining from every act of injustice, but especially by robbing them of that which is dearer to them than any earthly goods, the affections or the person of their wife; or drawing them into any horrid and unnatural acts of lewdness: because that the Lord is the avenger of all such, as we also have forewarned you and testified, and will execute condign punishment on such workers of iniquity. For God hath not called us unto uncleanness, but unto holiness, in his gospel enjoining all purity of heart and conversation on his people. He therefore that despiseth our admonitions, despiseth not man, but God, who hath also given unto us his Holy Spirit, by whose inspiration I now speak, and whose office it is to sanctify our bodies, souls, and spirits, and prepare us for the glory which is promised. Note, Whoremongers and adulterers God will judge; and into his kingdom shall nothing enter which defileth or maketh unclean.

9. [n] But as touching brotherly love, ye need not that I write unto you: for ye yourselves are [o] taught of God to love one another. 10. And indeed ye do [p] it toward all the brethren which are in all Macedonia: but we beseech you, brethren, that ye [q] increase more and more; 11. And that [r] ye study to be quiet, and to do your own business, and to work with your own hands, as we commanded you; 12. Verses 9—12. The apostle here inculcates,

1. The great duty of brotherly love. But as touching brotherly love, ye need not that I write unto you; for ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another, and are already exemplary for your fervent and enlarged charity: and indeed ye do it, not only towards the members of your own church, but towards all the brethren which are in all Macedonia. But, as there is still room for much higher advancement, we beseech you, brethren, that ye increase more and more. Note, (1.) We are never so high in grace, but we have summits of holiness yet to climb, and shall continue to have, till we reach the heavenly Zion, and come to join the spirits of the just there made perfect. (2.) All good comes from God: unless we are taught of him, no human lessons can lead us into the spirit of Christianity.

2. Of quietness and industry in our callings. And that ye study to be quiet, make it your holy ambition to live in peace with all men, not officiously intruding into other people's affairs; and to do your own business, minding the concerns of your own family and calling; and to work with your own hands, as many as by your station must earn your bread by daily labour, as we commanded you, idleness and Christianity being utterly inconsistent: that ye may walk honestly toward them that are without, paying every man his due; and that ye may have lack of nothing, but be furnished with all that yourselves and families may need, and not be burdensome to any.

13. But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are [t] asleep, that [u] ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. 14. For [x] if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which [y] sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. 15. For this we say unto you [z] by the word of the Lord, that [a] we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent them which are asleep. 16. [b] For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: [c] and the dead in Christ shall rise first; 17. Then we [d] which are alive and remain [e] shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so [f] shall we ever be with the Lord. 18. Wherefore [g] ‡comfort one another with these words.

Verses 13—18. The apostle here suggests the most encouraging arguments to support the Thessalonians under the loss of their near and dear relatives. But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them who are asleep, and departed in the faith of Christ, that ye sorrow not as others who have no hope, as the heathen, who make such howling and lamentation for the dead; since we have a hope full of immortality: for if we believe that Jesus died, and rose again, even so them also who sleep in Jesus will God bring with him, raising their bodies from the dust at the last day, as his was raised from the tomb. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we who are alive, and remain unto the coming of the Lord, even those members of his church who shall be numbered among the living in the great day of his appearing and glory, shall not prevent them who are asleep, so as to anticipate their resurrection; for the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout of triumph and exultation, with the voice of the archangel that shall attend his orders, and with the trump of God, like that tremendous sound which once issued from Sinai's top; and the dead in Christ, those who departed in his faith and fear, shall rise first, in virtue of their union with their exalted head: then we who are alive and remain, as many as shall then be found among the living, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord, enjoying that eternal blessedness in his immediate presence, which is the summit of our felicity. Wherefore comfort one another with these words, under all your present trials and discouragements, and in the prospect of your own approaching dissolution. Note, (1.) They who die in the faith of Christ return to his bosom, and their dust sleeps sweetly under his care, waiting a resurrection day. (2.) The faithful shall shortly meet together in bliss around the Redeemer's throne, and spend a happy eternity in his unceasing praises. (3.) This reviving hope is the comfort and support of the Christian, living and dying.

CHAP. V.—ANNO DOMINI, 54.

The apostle having spoken in the end of the foregoing chapter concerning the resurrection, and the second coming of Christ, he proceeds to speak concerning the uselessness of inquiring after the particular time of Christ's coming, which would be sudden and terrible to the wicked, but comfortable to the saints, ver. 1—5. He then exhorts them to the duties of watchfulness, sobriety, and the exercise of faith, hope, and love, ver. 6—10. In the next words he exhorts them to several duties they owed to others, or to one another, ver. 11—15. And afterwards to several other Christian duties of great importance, ver. 16—22. And then concludes this epistle, ver. 23—28.

1. BUT [a] of the times and the seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you. 2. For yourselves know perfectly that [b] the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night. 3. [c] For when they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape. 4. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. 5. [d] Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day: we are not of the night, nor of darkness.

Verses 1—5. Having mentioned the second advent of the Lord Jesus, he bids them prepare for it.

1. Respecting the precise time of his coming, it is left in an awful uncertainty, that we might be always ready. But of the times and the seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you: for yourselves know perfectly, that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night, so suddenly and unexpectedly. Note, It is a needless curiosity to desire precisely to know the hour of Christ's coming; but a most needful piece of wisdom to be always ready for his appearing.

2. His coming will be the terror and surprise of an ungodly world. For when they, who are secure in their sins, shall say, Peace and safety, promising themselves long years of sinful pleasures and indulgences, then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape. Note, When the day of the Lord comes, it will spread a terrible alarm through a world that lieth in wickedness, and then the ungodly and the sinner will in vain cry to rocks and mountains to cover their guilty heads.

3. This will be a day of light and triumph to the people of God. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, sleeping in sinful and sensual security, but brought into the marvellous light of the gospel; and therefore need not fear that the day should overtake you as a thief, and find you unprepared. Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day, walking under the bright beams of the Sun of Righteousness towards the kingdom of eternal glory: we are not of the night nor of darkness, in heathen ignorance, and under the blindness of the natural mind; but tread the shining path of truth, looking for and hastening unto the coming of the Son of man. Note, It is an unspeakable blessing to be delivered from the darkness of the fallen heart, and walking in the light of life, to have ever in our view the bright crown of righteousness which fadeth not away. Then we can say, Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly.

6. [e] Therefore let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober. 7. For [f] they that sleep sleep in the night; and they that be drunken are drunken in the night. 8. But let us, who are of the day, be sober, [g] putting on the breastplate of faith and love, and for an helmet [h] the hope of salvation. 9. For [i] God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ, 10. [k] Who died for us, that, whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him. 11. [l] Wherefore * comfort yourselves together, and edify one another, even as also ye do.

* Or exhort.

Verses 6—11. On the foregoing considerations the apostle grounds his exhortations to the practice of several necessary duties.

1. Therefore let us not sleep as do others, in carelessness about these eternal concerns, trifling away the precious moment of opportunity; but let us watch and pray, awake to the great affairs of our immortal souls, and ever listening when the sound, Behold he cometh, Go ye out to meet him, shall reach our ears. Blessed is that servant whom his Lord, when he cometh, shall find watching. And,

2. Be sober, temperate in the use of all God's creatures, neither overcharged with surfeiting or drunkenness, nor with the cares or pleasures of this life. For they that sleep, sleep in the night; and they that be drunken, are drunken in the night, and seek the darkness to hide their guilty heads, stupifying their consciences till the dreadful hour shall startle them into sensibility. But let us who are of the day, and walk in the light of truth, be sober (νηφωμεν) and vigilant, not intoxicated with any earthly pursuits or enjoyments, but seeking in the first place the kingdom of God and his righteousness.

3. We must be armed, as well as on our guard; putting on the breastplate of faith and love, and for an helmet the hope of salvation; these being the cardinal graces, by which the soul, like a warrior completely clad in armour, is able to resist every attack of the enemy, unhurt amidst all the fiery darts which sin and Satan can hurl against us. Note, (1.) We have mighty foes to grapple with, and need be well armed against them. (2.) Where faith is grounded on Christ, love in lively exercise, and hope with piercing eye looking up to eternal things, then none of our enemies can hurt us, nor will any of the snares of this world be able to prevail to draw our affections off from God and the things which are above.

4. He encourages them, from past experience, with confidence still to trust in the Lord. For God hath not appointed us to wrath; but, as is evident from his grace which we have already received, hath predestinated us to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ, who died for us, and thereby secured our eternal redemption; that, whether we wake or sleep, are numbered among the living or among the dead, at the day of his appearing, we should then live together with him in glory everlasting. Wherefore comfort yourselves together, or exhort and edify one another, even as also ye do; nothing affording such animating ground of hope, and serving to quicken the soul in all holy walking before God, as these blessed prospects and expectations. Note, (1.) Our salvation in Jesus Christ is firmly secured; and the more we are enabled to exercise confidence in him, the more steadily shall we bear up under all opposition. (2.) Christians should delight in exhorting, comforting, and edifying one another; and nothing can afford them more abundant matter than the expected coming of their Lord.

Verses 12—15. The apostle passes on to other needful exhortations.

1. He enjoins them to respect and honour their ministers. And we beseech you, brethren, to know them which labour among you, and are over you in the Lord, presiding in your worshipping assemblies, and admonish and instruct you in the good ways of the Lord, and to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake. Note, (1.) The duty of ministers is to labour with zeal and diligence for the good of their people's souls, to be over them, watching for their good as the shepherd tends his flock, with a constant eye to the great Shepherd who hath committed this trust to them; and to admonish them publicly and privately, without partiality, instructing them in all God's holy will. (2.) The duty of people to their ministers is to love them, to esteem them highly for their work's sake, to know and acknowledge them, with thankfulness for their labours, and serious attention to their advice.

2. He exhorts them to the discharge of those duties, which, as Christians, they owed each other.

(1.) Be at peace among yourselves, cultivating that mutual harmony and love with each other, and your ministers, which, as a church, will most especially tend to your establishment.

(2.) Now we exhort you, brethren, warn them that are unruly, reprove them for their disorderly walk, and threaten them with the church's censures if they amend not their ways; comfort the feeble minded, whose hearts are ready to sink under their trials, and are dejected with temptation or affliction, encourage them to bear up, and suggest every reviving motive to cheer their drooping spirits; support the weak, whose attainments are low in grace and knowledge, and are therefore more easily offended; we should therefore bear with their infirmities, and endeavour to strengthen their faith; be patient toward all men, put up with every affront or provocation, forbearing, and forgiving one another in love, and still waiting and hoping for their amendment.

3. See that none render evil for evil unto any man, in look, in word, or deed, but ever follow that which is good, both among yourselves, and to all men; do good to their bodies and souls, and be ready to every work and labour of love.

[y] Despise not prophesyings. 21. [z] Prove all things; [a] hold fast that which is good. 22. [b] Abstain from all appearance of evil.

Verses 16—22. We have here divers short and weighty exhortations.

1. Rejoice evermore in God as your Portion, in Christ as your Redeemer, in the Spirit as your Comforter; in one another, in all holy ordinances, and under every tribulation.

2. Pray without ceasing; be daily and often employed in this blessed work, in private in your families, or among the faithful, Note, To live without prayer, is the sure proof of an unregenerate heart.

3. In every thing give thanks, under every dispensation of Providence, not only for mercies received, but also under every affliction, maintaining still a cheerful spirit; for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you, and the constant, grateful returns we owe for the rich redemption which we have obtained in his dear Son.

4. Quench not the Spirit, by indulging any evil temper in your heart, or allowed sin in your conduct; resisting his gracious motions, or neglecting those means of grace wherein his divine influences are communicated to you.

5. Despise not prophesyings, or prophecies, which still contain much useful matter, and should be constantly read and regarded; and attend upon the ministrations of the word.

6. Prove all things, and try, by the gospel test, every doctrine which is advanced, that you may not be a prey to deceivers: hold fast that which is good, unmoved by seducers among yourselves, or the persecutions of your enemies from without.

7. Abstain from all appearance of evil, dreading sin in its most distant approaches, and avoiding whatever may have a tendency to lead you into evil, under however innocent a guise it may present itself unto.

23. And the very [c] God of peace [d] sanctify you wholly: and I pray God [e] your whole spirit, and soul, and body, be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. 24. [f] Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it. 25. [g] Brethren, pray for us. 26. [h] Greet all the brethren with an holy kiss. 27. I ‖ charge you by the Lord [i] that this epistle be read unto all the holy brethren. 28. [k] The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you. Amen.

Verses 23—28. The apostle concludes,

1. With his prayers for them. And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; may he, who is the author and giver of peace to your consciences, and who unites you together in this happy bond, may he cleanse you from all iniquity, and perfect you in holiness: and I pray God your whole spirit, and soul, and body, in every member and every faculty, be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Note, (1.) Prayer is the great means of sanctification. (2.) He who hath called us to his kingdom and glory, must preserve and keep us for himself, for of ourselves we have no strength.

2. He expresses his confidence in God's promises and protection. Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it; he never hath, never can fail those that trust him, and from his faithfulness we derive our fidelity.

3. He entreats an interest in their prayers. Brethren, pray for us. The greatest ministers need the prayers of all their people, and the more they are mindful of them at a throne of grace, the more good will they receive from their ministrations.

4. He adds his salutation. Greet all the brethren with an holy kiss. Let every member of the church be assured of my most cordial and affectionate regards.

5. He adjures them solemnly to read this epistle to the whole church. I charge you by the Lord, in his name, that this epistle be read unto all the holy brethren. Note, (1.) All Christians are bound to read the Scriptures diligently; nor can there be a stronger mark of Antichrist, than the keeping these sacred records sealed up in an unknown tongue. (2.) That public worship is very defective, where the Scriptures are not read in the congregation.

6. He closes with his usual benediction. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you. May the sovereign, boundless, and everlasting favour of the adored Jesus, be your portion now and for ever. Amen!

A PRACTICAL COMMENT

UPON THE

SECOND EPISTLE OF ST PAUL

TO THE

THESSALONIANS.

Introduction.

THIS Second Epistle was written soon after the former, and seems to be designed to prevent their running into a mistake, which might arise from some passages in the former Epistle, concerning the second coming of Christ; as if it were near at hand. The apostle in this Epistle is careful to prevent any wrong use some among them might make of those expressions of his, that were agreeable to the dialect of the prophets of the Old Testament; and informeth them, that there were many intermediate counsels yet to be fulfilled before that day of the Lord shall come, though, because it is sure, he had spoken of it as near. There are other things he writeth about for their consolation under sufferings, and exhortation and direction in duty.

CHAP. I.—ANNO DOMINI, 54.

After the introduction, ver. 1, 2. the apostle begins this epistle with an account of his high esteem for these Thessalonians, ver. 3, 4. He then comforteth them under their afflictions and persecutions, ver. 5—10. And tells them what his prayers were to God for them, ver. 11, 12.

1. [a] PAUL, and Silvanus, and Timotheus, unto the church of the Thessalonians in God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ: 2. [b] Grace unto you, and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. 3. [c] We are bound to thank God always for you, brethren, as it is meet, because that your faith groweth exceedingly, and the charity of every one of you all toward each other aboundeth; 4. So that we ourselves [d] glory in you in the churches of God for your patience and faith in all your persecutions and tribulations that ye endure: 5. [e] Which is a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God, that ye may be counted [f] worthy of the kingdom of God, [g] for which ye also suffer: 6. [h] Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you; 7. And to you who are troubled [i] rest with us, when the Lord Jesus [k] shall be revealed from heaven with * his mighty angels, 8. [l] In flaming fire, † taking vengeance on them that [m] know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: 9.

p Ch. 2. 13. ver. 3. 1 Thes. 1. 5. & 2. 13.

Verses 1—10. The apostle joins the same persons in the inscription of this epistle with himself as in the former. Paul, and Silvanus, and Timotheus, unto the church of the Thessalonians, in God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ: Grace unto you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

1. He expresses his thankfulness to God on their behalf. We are bound to thank God always for you, brethren, as it is meet, and gratefully to acknowledge his blessings and mercies, especially those spiritual blessings, which he hath so richly bestowed upon you, because that your faith groweth exceedingly, in fuller discoveries of the gospel, and more unshaken confidence in the promises, as it is evident in all the blessed fruits of grace and holiness which flourish among you, and the charity of every one of you all towards each other aboundeth, the sure proof of your faith unfeigned. Note, (1.) Faith, as well as every other grace, is at present imperfect; and they who are most advanced, have need to pray, increase our faith. (2.) Where true faith is, every other grace must follow, for it worketh by love.

2. Their eminence in grace gave him occasion to boast of them to other churches. So that we ourselves glory in you in the churches of God; as for your other gifts and graces, so especially for your patience and faith in all your persecutions, and tribulations, that ye endure, with holy intrepidity, unshaken perseverance, and calm submission, bearing up under every trial. Note, The commendation of good men should be a powerful encouragement to us abidingly to approve our fidelity in the cause of Christ.

3. Their sufferings would soon end in eternal rest, and the authors of them suffer condign vengeance, which is a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God, who will soon make his impartial justice to appear, and even now it is your honour, and wisely ordered by him, that such tribulation should befall you, that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which ye also suffer, conformed thus to your head, and made meet to reign with him: seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you, who shall shortly feel the arm of an avenging Judge; but to you who are troubled, rest with us, even the present rest in God, into which they who believe do now enter, and soon that eternal rest will come, which remaineth for the people of God, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in all the pomp of tremendous majesty; in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; whether idolatrous Gentiles, or unbelieving Jews, or impenitent sinners of every kind, who shall be punished with everlasting destruction, from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; driven into eternal banishment from his blissful abode, and suffering in body and soul the vengeance of eternal fire: when, in that happy day for his redeemed, he shall come to be glorified in his saints, whose perfect salvation shall then be accomplished; and to be admired in all them that believe, being henceforward the subject of their everlasting adoration, love, and praise; because our testimony among you was believed, and you will reap the blessed fruits of your faith, in that great day. Note, (1.) There is a day at hand, when the persecutors and the persecuted will have impartial justice done them at the bar of God. (2.) The prospect of that tribunal should comfort us under all the unjust reproaches, revilings, and tribulations which we now endure. (3.) The appearing of the Lord will be terrible to the ungodly and the sinner, whose neglect of God and his gospel will then be avenged; when wrath to the uttermost shall overtake them, and, driven with confusion from the presence of an angry Judge, the jaws of hell shall yawn to receive them; and deep ingulphed in everlasting burnings, they shall sink and never rise up again. (4.) Christ will be the eternal object of his people's admiration; and whilst with wonder they trace from first to last the amazing dispensation of his grace, their hearts will glow with rapture, and their tongues be filled with never-ending praise.

11. Wherefore also ᵠ we pray always for you, that our God would ‡ count you ʳ worthy of this calling, and fulfil all the ˢ good pleasure of his goodness, and the ᵗ work of faith with power: 12. ᵘ That the name of our Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified in you, and ye in him, according to the grace of our God and the Lord Jesus Christ.

Verses 11, 12. In the prospect of this day the apostle redoubled his supplication for them. Wherefore also we pray always for you.

1. That our God, in whose favour and love we have the most assured interest, would count you worthy of this calling; enabling you to walk as becomes your vocation, and bring you to the possession of the glory he hath promised, and fulfil all the good pleasure of his goodness, accomplishing the purposes of his sovereign grace towards you, carrying on and completing in you the salvation which he hath begun; and the work of faith with power, strengthening this radical grace, that all the rest may flourish with greater vigour. Note, (1.) All our worthiness comes from God's good pleasure, who hath chosen, called, and led us hitherto; and to his sovereign grace we must be alike indebted for all that is yet to come, that we are enabled in faith to persevere, and shall reach at last the heavenly hill. (2.) If our faith be wrought of God with power, then shall we never fail.

2. He prays, That the name of our Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified in you, by your exemplary conduct and conversation, and ye in him, as now united to him by faith, and soon to rise and reign with him eternally; according to the grace of our God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, which he hath bestowed on you for this great end, that his own glorious name might be for ever exalted, and all the praise of the sinner's salvation be ascribed to him alone.

CHAP. II.—ANNO DOMINI, 54.

The apostle is very careful to hinder the spreading of an error which some among them had fallen into, concerning the coming of Christ, as being very near, ver. 1—3. Then he proceedeth to confute this error he cautioned them against, by telling them of two great events that were antecedent to the coming of Christ, viz. A general apostasy, and the revelation of Antichrist, concerning whom the apostle tells them many remarkable things about his name, his character, his rise, his fall, his reign, and the sin and ruin of his subjects, ver. 3—12. He then comforts them against the terror of this apostasy, and exhorts them to steadfastness, ver. 13—15. And concludeth with a prayer for them, ver. 16, 17.

1. NOW ᵃ we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, a Rom. 12. 1. 2 Cor. 10. 1. 2 Tim. 4. 1. 1 Tim. 6. 14. 1 Cor. 1. 8. 1 Thes. 3. 13. & 4. 16, 17. Mat. 25. 31—34. & 24. 30, 31.

and by our gathering together unto him,
2. [b] That ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand. 3. [c] Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, except there come [d] a falling away first, and that [e] man of sin be revealed, the [f] son of perdition; 4. Who opposeth and [g] exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God. 5. [h] Remember ye not, that, when I was yet with you, I told you these things? 6. And now ye know what * withholdeth that he might be revealed in his time. 7. For the [i] mystery of iniquity doth already work: only he who now letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way: 8. And then shall that [k] Wicked be revealed, [l] whom the Lord shall consume [m] with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming: 9. Even him, whose coming is [n] after the working of Satan with all power, and signs, and lying wonders, 10. And with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in [o] them that perish: because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. 11. [p] And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie: 12. [q] That they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness.

Verses 1—12. An error of a dangerous tendency had, it seems, crept into the church of the Thessalonians, that the coming of Christ to judge the world should be in their days. Whether this arose from their mistake of what the apostle had mentioned in his former epistle, or was broached by some who vouched his authority to support what they advanced; he sets himself to confute the assertion, and to rectify their judgment in this matter.

1. He solemnly warns them not to be troubled with needless fears and apprehensions. Now we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him; by all the hopes you entertain of meeting him with joy in that day, I adjure you, that ye be not soon shaken in mind, from the gospel which ye have embraced, and tossed to and fro with every wind of doctrine; nor be troubled by any assertions which may be advanced, or misconstructions which may arise; neither by spirit, by those who pretend to speak under divine inspiration; nor by word, however confidently any may advance this notion; nor by letter, as from us, either counterfeiting our hand, or perverting our meaning; as that the day of Christ is at hand. Let no man deceive you by any means: the consequence of such a persuasion would be very dangerous; and when you found yourselves disappointed of your vainly raised expectations, it might shake your faith in the truth of the whole gospel revelation. Note, (1.) One way in which the arch-deceiver strikes at the faith of God's elect, is by endeavouring through his emissaries, pretending to revelation, or a knowledge of the prophetic word, to raise groundless hopes in their minds, and from the disappointment of them to suggest, that the whole may be a delusion. (2.) Though we cannot fix the time of Christ's coming, yet nothing is more certain, than that he that cometh shall come, and shall not tarry: may we without fear or dismay be ready to meet him. (3.) However dispersed God's people now may be in different regions, and living in different ages, they shall one day be gathered together around the throne of Jesus, and so shall be ever with the Lord.

2. He confutes the error which was broached, by showing, that many events, which would require much time to fulfil them, must precede the second coming of Christ.

(1.) There must be first a general apostasy. For that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, from the doctrines of the gospel, and the practice of godliness, which shall usher in the reign of Antichrist.

(2.) The rise of the antichristian power is described, ver. 3—10. To whom what is here spoken belongs, hath been matter of much dispute: I cannot but own, with the best Protestant commentators, my full conviction, that the Popish hierarchy is the subject of this prophecy; wherein we have,

[1.] The names of this person, or rather state, here spoken of. The man of sin, the son of perdition, that wicked one; which do not point out any individual, but a succession of men, carrying on the same destructive designs; whose wicked practices and horrid delusions will be the cause of perdition to multitudes, who will perish with them.

[2.] When that man of sin is revealed, the son of perdition, he may be known by these characters. Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; assuming all power in heaven and in earth; undertaking to enact laws contrary to God's word and will; and setting up himself above kings and emperors, yea, and above the angels too, who are called gods in Scripture; so that he as God, arrogating divine perfections, sitteth in the temple of God, the church, where he hath erected his unhallowed throne; showing himself that he is God; assuming the blasphemous titles of, our God the pope, God upon earth, &c. usurping divine authority over the bodies and consciences of men; pretending to pardon sin by his own power; and speaking great swelling words of blasphemy. Remember ye not, says the apostle, that when I was yet with you, I told you these things.

[3.] His rise is pointed out. And now ye know, if you reflect upon what I told you formerly, what withholdeth, that the man of sin doth not immediately appear, even the power of the heathen Roman emperors. During their rule, the bishops of Rome were prevented from rising above their fellows; but this empire would in process of time moulder away, that he may be revealed in his time; when God, according to his own decrees, should permit the antichristian power to rear its head. For the mystery of iniquity doth already work, and the seeds of pride, dissension, and worldly ambition, have begun to be sown: but he that letteth, the Roman emperors, will let, until he be taken out of the way, their power declining, and the seat of empire being removed from Rome; and then shall that Wicked be revealed, and the mystery of iniquity, and the tyranny of the popish power, arrive at their height.

[4.] His ruin is as certain as his rise. Whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming; raising up a noble army of preachers, who by the word of truth, accompanied with the Spirit's power shall cut in sunder the fetters wherewith superstition hath enslaved the minds of men; and as the kingdom of Antichrist shall be overturned hereby, so shall he and all his followers at last perish in the lake of fire.

[5.] The way in which this wicked one shall maintain his usurped dominion is described. Whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power, and signs, and lying wonders; with all satanical influence and wiles, pretending to work miracles in support of his cause, and by a system of frauds deluding the nations of the earth, with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish, deceiving the souls of men to their eternal ruin; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved, but turned aside to error, and chose their own delusions. And for this cause, in just judgment upon them, God shall send them strong delusion; abandoning them to their own hearts, and giving them up to judicial blindness; that they should believe a lie; all those absurd legends, forgeries, and falsehoods, with which the church of Rome abounds; that they all might be damned who believe not the truth, rejecting Christ and his gospel, but had pleasure in unrighteousness, delighting in their errors, superstitions, and bloody persecutions, to fill up the measure of their iniquities. Note, It is just in God to abandon obstinate sinners to their own delusions, and leave them to the damnation which themselves have chosen.

13. But [r] we are bound to give thanks alway to God for you, brethren, beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth: 14. Whereunto he called you by our gospel, to the obtaining of the [s] glory of our Lord Jesus Christ. 15. Therefore, brethren, [t] stand fast, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught, whether by word, or our epistle. 16. [u] Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God, even our Father, which hath loved us, and hath given us [x] everlasting consolation and good hope through grace, 17. [y] Comfort your hearts, and stablish you in every good word and work.

Verses 13—17. The apostle,

1. Expresses his thankfulness to God for his electing love. But we are bound to give thanks alway to God for you, brethren, beloved of the Lord, because it is evident, from your whole conduct and conversation, that God hath, from the beginning, chosen you to salvation; having predestinated you, before the worlds were, to an eternity of blessedness, as elect vessels, separated by his sovereign grace from the corrupted mass of mankind: and, as the means of accomplishing the purposes of his eternal counsels, hath, through sanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth, begun to prepare you for the inheritance to which he hath appointed you: whereunto he also called you by our gospel, the happy instrument of your conversion, to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ, which he hath procured for his people, and freely bestows upon them, according to the riches of his grace. Note, (1.) God hath a people whom he hath chosen from the beginning unto salvation, and men, nor devils, nor sin, shall be able to frustrate the designs of his grace towards them. (2.) Wherever the Lord chooses a soul for glory, he inseparably annexes the means to the end; calling them by his gospel to faith and holiness, and working both in their hearts. It would be the most absurd presumption to fancy we are the elect, if we cannot feel and demonstrate the work of the Spirit of faith and santification in our hearts and lives.

2. He exhorts them to be faithful. Therefore, brethren, in the assured prospect of success, stand fast; God's election of you should be the quickening and encouraging motive to make your own calling and election sure; and hold the traditions which ye have been taught, the doctrines which we, your faithful ministers, have delivered to you, as received from Christ; whether by word, in our public preaching or private discourse; or by our epistle, lately sent to you. Note, God's word is our only rule of duty; thereunto we must cleave.

3. He closes with a fervent prayer for them. Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God, even our Father, who alike are the objects of our worship, and are one in the glory of the same undivided Godhead: who hath loved us, and hath given us everlasting consolation, the foretastes of those joys that shall hereafter be uninterrupted and eternal: and good hope through grace, built on the substantial foundation of his unchangeable word; comfort your hearts with a clearer knowledge of your invaluable privileges, and a brighter manifestation of his love to your souls amidst all your trials and sufferings; and stablish you in every good word and work, that you may approve yourselves faithful, and unto death persevere immoveably in the doctrine and practice of the blessed gospel. Note, (1.) God's everlasting love is the fountain of all our blessedness. (2.) Though our consolations may now be at times interrupted by the manifold temptations to which we are exposed, in eternity they will flow with an unceasing stream like a river. (3.) Good hope is still a sure anchor of the soul, when great joy may be withdrawn; and all is through grace, not for our desert, but according to the multitude of God's mercies. (4.) It is the Lord's work to comfort and stablish our hearts; and whilst we are waiting upon him, we shall assuredly renew our strength.

CHAP. III.—ANNO DOMINI, 54.

In the close of the foregoing chapter the apostle had prayed earnestly for the Thessalonians, and now he desireth their prayers, encouraging them to trust in God, to which he subjoins another petition for them, ver. 1—5. He then proceedeth to give them commands and directions, for the correcting some things he was informed were amiss among them, ver. 6—15. And concludeth with benedictions and prayers, ver. 16—18.

1. FINALLY, brethren, [a] pray for us, [b] that the word of the Lord * may have free course, and be glorified, even as it is with you: 2. And that [c] we may be delivered from † unreasonable and wicked men: for [d] all men have not faith. 3. But the Lord is [e] faithful, who shall stablish you, and keep you from evil. 4. And [f] we have confidence in the Lord touching you, that ye both do and will do the things which we command you. 5. And [g] the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and [h] into ‡ the patient waiting for Christ.

Verses 1—5. The apostle here draws to a conclusion, and,

1. Entreats their prayers. Finally, brethren, pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have free course, and spread with increasing success, and be glorified, even as it is with you, in the mighty effects produced by our ministration of it; and that we may be delivered from unreasonable and wicked men, hardened in pride and prejudice against the truth: who use every violent effort to oppose its progress, and silence the ministers of the gospel; for all men have not faith; but even among professors of Christianity we often meet with the greatest opposers, and are in most danger from these false brethren. Note, (1.) The success of his labours lies nearest the heart of every gospel minister. (2.) All who have tasted of the grace of God in truth, are bound in ceaseless prayer to beg that the same word which they have received, may, in defiance of all opposition, run and be glorified, to the conviction of sinners, the confusion of gainsayers, and the edification of the faithful. (3.) Unreasonable and wicked men abound in every age: and they who, though professors of Christianity, are themselves destitute of divine faith, cannot but now, as then, testify the same enmity against the zealous preachers of the gospel.

2. He expresses his confidence in them. But the Lord is faithful who shall stablish you, and keep you from evil; whatever wiles seducers may employ, or however severely you may be exposed to the enmity of persecutors, the Lord will never fail you, and his grace shall make you more than conquerors. And we have confidence in the Lord touching you, that ye both do, and will do the things which we command you, in his name, and by his authority. Note, (1.) Our great encouragement is God's fidelity to his promises: he will not fail us, and therefore we cannot fail him. (2.) If the Lord did not keep us, we should not for a moment be able to keep ourselves; but when we have him at our right hand, neither the evil of sin shall prevail against us, nor the evil of suffering discourage us.

3. He adds a short prayer for them, containing two important requests. And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, turning your affections from every crooked path, and directly leading you to his blessed self, and to that happiness which is to be enjoyed in a sense of his present and everlasting love to your souls; and into the patient waiting for Christ; enabling you with cheerfulness and submission to take up the cross, and to look for the coming of your Lord, when there shall be an end put to all your sufferings for ever.

Verses 6—15. Though the apostle had so highly commended them, and expressed his confidence in them in general, yet there were some among them who needed sharp rebuke; and indeed in this imperfect state of things, no absolutely perfect and pure society of men is to be expected.

1. He warns them to avoid the company of such as walked disorderly among them, whose ill characters he here describes. Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by the apostolic power committed to us, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that pretends to be a Christian, but walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us, being a disgrace and a dishonour to his profession. For yourselves know how ye ought to follow us, and remember the practice we recommended to you, and the example which we set before you; for we behaved not ourselves disorderly among you, neither did we eat any man's bread for nought, without paying for it; but wrought with labour and travail night and day, to earn our maintenance, that we might not be chargeable to any of you, and might preach the gospel freely, without putting you to the least expense. Not because we have not power to demand our subsistence, as due to our ministerial labours: but we rather chose to wave our right, to make ourselves an example unto you to follow us, encouraging industry, and discountenancing idleness. For even when we were with you, this we commanded you, that if any would not work, neither should he eat, nor receive any relief from the church, whose charity should be applied, not to the maintenance of the slothful, but to the support of the sick, infirm, and those who through age or accident are disabled from providing for themselves. For we hear that there are some which walk among you disorderly, working not at all, but depending on others for relief, and are busy-bodies, tattling from house to house, prying into the secrets of families, blowing up the coals of dissension, and the very pests of society. Note, (1.) When we can appeal to our people for the exemplariness of our own conversation, and for the conformity of our practice to our preaching, we may command and exhort them to their duty with confidence. (2.) Sloth and indolence are most opposite to the spirit of Christianity; and though men may plead they do no harm, yet if they neglect the duty of their calling and stations, God will reckon with them as with disorderly walkers. (3.) Idleness opens a door to every evil; and they who choose not to do their own work, the devil will find them employ.

2. He addresses himself with authority to these disorderly walkers. Now them that are such, we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, by every endearing argument which his love can suggest, or the dread of his displeasure urge, that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread; peaceably minding their own affairs with diligence, and providing for themselves and families a becoming maintenance from the produce of their honest industry.

3. He directs the faithful and industrious how they should behave. But ye, brethren, be not weary in well-doing, but with diligence discharge the labours of your calling; and if you have more than your own necessities require, there are many deserving objects who crave your charity. And if any man among you obey not our word by this epistle, and change not his ways, note that man, and have no company with him; permit him not to be your intimate, nor admit him to the table of the Lord; that, by your just censure of his conduct, he may be ashamed, and brought to repentance and amendment. Yet count him not as an enemy at once, and deal roughly, but admonish him as a brother, that, if it please the Lord, he may yet be reclaimed, and not be finally ruined. Note, (1.) We must not only walk orderly ourselves, but show our disapprobation of those who behave dishonourable to their profession. (2.) Before more heavy censures are pronounced, every kind admonition must be attempted. Love will often shame those into ingenuous acknowledgments, that severity would but have exasperated and hardened.

16. Now [y] The Lord of peace himself give you peace always by all means. The Lord be with you all. 17. The salutation of Paul [z] with mine own hand, which is the token in every epistle: so I write. 18. [a] The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

Verses 16—18. The apostle concludes with,

1. His prayer for them. Now the Lord of peace himself, who purchased it by his blood, and by his Spirit seals it to the hearts of his people, give you peace always by all means; meeting you in the use of every instituted ordinance; filling you with a comfortable sense of his reconciliation to you; and giving you a happy union and harmony among each other. The Lord be with you all; may his presence and blessing be ever in the midst of you; and where he manifests himself, there heaven is already begun in the soul.

2. His subscription. The salutation of Paul with mine own hand, which is the token in every epistle, of its genuineness, to prevent the forgeries of seducers: so I write, in the close of every letter, when my amanuensis hath finished.

3. The benediction. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all; may you share all the present and eternal blessedness included in his sovereign grace and love! Amen.

A PRACTICAL COMMENT

UPON THE

FIRST EPISTLE OF ST PAUL

TO

TIMOTHY.

Introduction.

HITHERTO Paul's epistles were directed to churches, now follow some to particular persons: two to Timothy, one to Titus, and another to Philemon; all three ministers: Timothy and Titus were Evangelists, an inferior order to the Apostles, as appears by that, Eph. iv. 11. Some prophets, some apostles, some evangelists. Their commission and work was much the same with that of the apostles, to plant churches, and water the churches that were planted. Timothy was first converted by Paul, and therefore he calls him his own son in the faith; we read of his conversion, Acts xvi. 23.

The scope of these two Epistles is to direct Timothy how to discharge his office as an evangelist at Ephesus, where he now was, and where Paul ordered him for some time to reside, to perfect the good work which he had begun there.

CHAP. I.—ANNO DOMINI, 65.

peace, from God our Father, and Jesus Christ our Lord. 3. As I besought thee to abide still at Ephesus, [f] when I went into Macedonia, that thou mightest charge some that they teach no other doctrine, 4. Verses 1—4. We have here,

1. The apostolical inscription. Paul an apostle of Jesus Christ the true Messiah, by the express commandment of God appointed to this office, who is our Saviour, having in his eternal mind designed the glorious plan of our redemption; and of our Lord Jesus Christ, one with the Father in glory and authority; and who is emphatically our hope, all our expectations in time and eternity resting upon his finished salvation; unto Timothy my own son in the faith, begotten by me in the gospel, is this epistle sent.

2. His salutation. Grace, mercy, and peace, be with you, from God our Father, in whose love we have a common interest; and Jesus Christ our Lord, who bought us with his blood, called us to the obedience of the faith, and, as his more immediate servants, put us in trust with his gospel.

3. He reminds him of the design he had in leaving him at Ephesus, and exhorts him to be faithful to his charge. As I besought thee to abide still at Ephesus, when I went into Macedonia, that thou mightest charge some, that they teach no other doctrine; even those Judaizing teachers, who would corrupt the simplicity of the gospel: be faithful to thy trust, and warn the people to beware of these seducers; neither to give heed to fables, their absurd traditions, and endless genealogies; affecting to trace up their descent from Abraham and the patriarchs, and valuing themselves highly on such an ancestor; which minister questions, and endless disputes, rather than godly edifying, which is in faith. Note, (1.) Unedifying disputes about unessential matters have the most pernicious tendency to destroy vital religion. (2.) There can be no true godliness, but what springs from faith as its principle. (3.) Ministers must watch over the flock, and guard them from the inroads of error, as well as impiety. (4.) Broachers of new doctrines, contrary to the fundamental articles of faith, should receive from the bishops of the church deserved rebuke.

5. [h] Now the end of the commandment is charity, out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned: 6. From which some having swerved, [i] have turned aside unto vain jangling; 7. [k] Desiring to be teachers of the law; understanding neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm. 8. But we know that [l] the law is good, if a man use it lawfully; 9. Knowing this, that [m] the law is not made for a righteous man, but for the [n] lawless and disobedient, for the ungodly and for sinners, for unholy and profane, for murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers, for manslayers, 10. [o] For whoremongers, for them that defile themselves with mankind, for men-stealers, for liars, for perjured persons, and if there be any other thing that is [p] contrary to sound doctrine; 11. According to the [q] glorious gospel of the [r] blessed God, [s] which was committed to my trust.

Verses 5—11. Having repeated the charge before given to Timothy, concerning the deluding teachers, he here,

1. Directs him what end he should aim at, the preservation of the church's peace. Now the end of the commandment (either of the moral law, or of the charge which the apostle had given him) is to promote charity, or love towards God and man, flowing out of a pure heart, sanctified by the blessed Spirit, and of a good conscience, purged from dead works by the blood of sprinkling, and of faith unfeigned, the radical grace, from whence love and every other divine temper springs: from all which some having swerved, and wandering wide of the mark, have turned aside unto vain jangling, trifling questions, and idle disputes; desiring to be teachers of the law; setting up for great wisdom, as interpreters of it, and zealous to urge its observation upon the Gentiles as necessary to salvation; understanding neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm; real strangers to its spiritual nature, use, and design. Note, (1.) Love in the heart is the great preservative from all disputes and dissensions. (2.) It is a sad consideration, when ignorant men intrude into the ministry, strangers to the oracles of God, and unacquainted with any of the truths themselves in which they pretend to instruct others.

2. The right use of the law is here declared. But, however abused it may be, we know that the law is good, if a man use it lawfully, and apply it to the purposes for which God gave it, to convince the conscience of sin; to be a schoolmaster to lead us to Christ; and, though ceasing to be a covenant of works, yet continuing to be a rule of duty, according to which God will proceed in his judgment at the last day. Knowing this, that the law is not made for a righteous man, nor doth the damning sentence of it lie against any faithful soul, that is righteous in Christ Jesus; but for the lawless and disobedient, for the ungodly and for sinners, for unholy and profane, who with daring impenitence and wilful obstinacy transgress it, for murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers, for manslayers, for whoremongers, for them that defile themselves with mankind, for men-stealers, for liars, for perjured persons, and if there be any other thing that is contrary to sound doctrine: all which, and every other crime, the law condemns; and the judgment denounced by the law is according to the glorious gospel of the blessed God, which was committed to my trust; there being the most perfect agreement in this respect between the law and the gospel, which condemns all ungodliness, and teaches us to live righteously, soberly, and godly in this present evil world. Note, The gospel is an awful glorious trust; and whilst we bless God for the honour he puts upon us in committing it to our charge, we need tremble for ourselves, lest we should be found unfaithful.

12. And I thank Christ Jesus our Lord, [t] who hath enabled me, for that he counted me faithful, putting me into the ministry; 13. Who [u] was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious: but [x] I obtained mercy, because [y] I did it ignorantly in unbelief. 14. Verses 12—17. The apostle with deep gratitude acknowledges the distinguishing favour shown him of God, not only in calling him to the knowledge of his grace, but in putting him intrust with the gospel, and qualifying him for the discharge of it. I thank Christ Jesus our Lord, who hath enabled me, for that he counted me faithful, putting me into the ministry. Note, (1.) None are Christ's ministers, but those whom he puts into their office. (2.) Whom he calls, he will qualify for the discharge of their ministry. (3.) Want of ministerial abilities is a sure proof that men run unsent.

1. The apostle humbly owns the dreadful state out of which by divine grace he was called; who was before a blasphemer of Christ and his gospel, and a persecutor of his people, and injurious, branding the Christian name with every malignant aspersion. Note, (1.) The depth of our guilt serves to magnify but the more the riches of divine grace in our pardon and salvation. (2.) True converts are ever ready to take shame to themselves, and own their former abominations with deep regret.

2. God hath mercy on him. But I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief; which he mentions not as an extenuation of his guilt, but to show the state of rooted prejudice, and hardened unbelief, in which the Lord found him; and the grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant, beyond all conception wonderful, that it should be extended to such a wretch as me: with faith and love, which is in Christ Jesus, and which in the richest measure the Lord was pleased to bestow upon my soul. So that from the happiest experience I can now declare, that this is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief: none therefore, after the mercy which I have received, need despair. Howbeit, notwithstanding my enormous guilt, for this cause I obtained mercy, that in me first, or the chief of sinners, Jesus Christ might show forth all long-suffering, for a pattern to them who should hereafter believe on him to life everlasting; encouraging the vilest to hope and return to him, as being still willing and able to save to the uttermost. Note, (1.) Unbelief is at the bottom of every evil. (2.) The chief of sinners may be saved as freely as the least; those only perish who will not come to Christ that they may have life. (3.) They who are discouraged under a sense of the greatness of their sins, should remember those who have already found mercy, and from the deepest crimes have risen to the greatest heights of grace; witness David, Manasseh, Peter, and this apostle. (4.) All who by faith lay hold on Jesus Christ, have everlasting life, and shall never more enter into condemnation.

3. He ascribes praise to God for all the rich grace which he had experienced. Now unto the King eternal, immortal, and invisible, the only wise God! to Jesus, who in the highest possesses every divine attribute and perfection, be honour and glory for ever. Amen. Note, They who are sensible of their infinite obligation to Christ, will be ceaseless in their grateful acknowledgment to the Author of all their mercies.

18. [h] This charge I commit unto thee, son Timothy, according to the prophecies which went before on thee, that thou by them mightest war a good warfare; 19. Verses 18—20. The apostle repeats his charge to Timothy, mentioned ver. 3—5. This charge I commit unto thee, son Timothy, according to the prophecies which went before on thee, and marked thee out as appointed of God for signal service, that, remembering these things, thou mightest be quickened to correspond therewith, and by them mightest war a good warfare; as a faithful soldier of Christ, manfully fighting under his banner against sin and error; holding faith, firmly attached to the purity of the gospel doctrines, and maintaining a good conscience, void of offence towards God and man; which some having put away, rejected and thrust from them, concerning faith have made shipwreck, and apostatized from the fair profession which they once made; of whom is Hymeneus and Alexander, those notorious heretics, whom I have delivered unto Satan; by my apostolic power assigning them over to that tormentor, to inflict upon them severe chastisement; that they may learn not to blaspheme, and that by their sufferings they may be brought to a conviction of their sins; or, at least, so terrified, as not to dare any longer to persist in their horrid blasphemies. Note, (1.) We are now engaged in a dangerous warfare, and the ministers of Christ especially will meet with the strongest opposition. We have need therefore to hold fast by him who is our strength, that we may stand in the evil day. (2.) None usually turn out so dreadfully, and become such horrid blasphemers, as those who apostatize from the profession of religion which once they made.

Verses 1—8. The apostle exhorts,

1. That supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks be made, in the church for all ranks and conditions of men; particularly for kings, and for all that are in authority, the inferior magistrates: that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life, protected from all violence and injuries; and in all godliness and honesty, approving our unfeigned piety to God, and our unimpeached integrity towards men.

2. He suggests the strongest reasons to support his exhortations. For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Saviour who, enjoins universal charity, and will have all men to be saved; some of all nations, ranks, and conditions, Gentiles as well as Jews, high and low, rich and poor; and, in order thereunto, hath sent out his gospel to call them, that they may come to the knowledge of the truth, by the faith of which alone salvation can be obtained. For there is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus; who, though very God, hath taken our nature into personal union with himself, and in his glorified body stands as the alone Mediator before the throne, to make the persons, prayers, and services of his people accepted. Who gave himself a ransom for all, paying down the price of our redemption in the drops of his own most precious blood, and thereby making a full satisfaction to divine justice for sinners of every condition and degree, as was foretold by the prophets, and to be testified in due time to all nations. Whereunto I am ordained a preacher, and an apostle, by a divine commission, (I speak the truth in Christ, and lie not, as the heart-searching God doth bear me witness) a teacher of the Gentiles, to whom especially I am sent, in faith and verity, to bring them to the true faith of Christ, and this office I labour to discharge with all simplicity and faithfulness. Note, (1.) It is God's will that we should pray for others as well as for ourselves. (2.) Our encouragement to draw near to a throne of grace is this, that we have one Mediator there, who ever liveth to make intercession for us. (3.) Since Jesus hath paid, and God hath accepted the ransom, all that plead it have a right to the eternal redemption thereby obtained. (4.) None can be saved but by coming to the knowledge of the truth: where Christ is not preached, there can be no hope, for there is salvation in no other. (5.) It is an inestimable blessing to enjoy the light of the gospel, and to sit under their ministry who preach it in faith and verity.

3. He directs them how to pray. I will therefore that men, who bear the Christian name, pray every where: not confined to any particular place, since God is alike present in all; in the closet, in the family, as well as in the great congregation; only when we draw near to him if we would obtain acceptance, we must be found, lifting up holy hands, not polluted with allowed sin, but washed in atoning blood, without wrath and doubting, since harboured malice, unbelieving distrust of God, and a contentious spirit, must necessarily destroy all the efficacy of prayer.

Verses 9—15. The apostle here directs how women professing godliness should behave.

1. With modesty. In like manner also, that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamfacedness and sobriety; not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array; but (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works. What a contrast to this description are our manners! yet the truly gracious woman will still think modesty her brightest ornament; and when fashion imposes aught that is fantastical, extravagant, or immodest, will dare to disobey.

2. Let the woman learn in silence, with all subjection: not presuming to be speakers in the house of God, but hearers: for I suffer not a woman to teach in public, nor to usurp authority over the man, by that or any other instance of affected superiority; but to be in silence. For Adam was first formed, then Eve, from his side, Gen. ii. 22. to denote her inferiority. And Adam was not deceived by the serpent, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression; and he, seduced by her, or out of fond affection, determined to die with her, wilfully followed her example. Notwithstanding she shall be saved in child-bearing, amidst all the anguish which flows from the sentence pronounced on her, Gen. iii. 16. and through that child which is born of woman, the adored Immanuel, she shall obtain everlasting salvation; if they continue in faith, and charity, and holiness, with sobriety, and prove themselves living members of Christ, in whom there is no difference between male or female, but both are alike called to partake of his grace and glory.

CHAP. III.—ANNO DOMINI, 65.

In this chapter our apostle treats of church-officers. And, 1. He gives us the qualifications of a person to be admitted to the office of a bishop, ver. 1—7. 2. Of the qualifications of deacons, ver. 8—10. And of their wives, ver. 11. And again of the deacons, ver. 12, 13. 3. Of the reasons of his writing to Timothy, whereupon he speaks of the church and the foundation truth professed therein, ver. 14. to the end.

1. THIS [a] is a true saying, If a man desire [b] the office of a bishop, he desireth a good work. 2. [h] Acts 12. 12. & 6. 3. 1 Sam. 2. 24. 1 Cor. 5. 12. 1 Thes. 4. 12.

Verses 1—7. Timothy being left to preside over and regulate the affairs of the Ephesian church, the apostle gives him directions concerning those who should be ordained to ministerial offices among them.

This is a true saying, if a man, inwardly moved by the Holy Ghost, desireth the office of a bishop, or overseer of the church of Christ, he desireth a good work; the post is most honourable and important, yet withal most laborious, and requires singular qualifications for the right discharge thereof. A bishop then must (1.) Be blameless; his morals irreproachable, and his character able to bear the nicest scrutiny. (2.) If he be not single, let him be the husband of one wife, that hath never given a divorce, in order to marry again, nor lives in polygamy. (3.) He must be vigilant over the souls committed to his care, and habitually resident among them. (4.) Sober, moderate in the use of every creature-comfort, and temperate in all things. (5.) Of good behaviour; courteous, engaging, prudent, edifying. (6.) Given to hospitality; ready to relieve strangers, and assist the necessitous. (7.) Apt to teach; furnished with Christian knowledge and experience, and possessing the faculty of communicating his sentiments with ease and propriety for the improvement of others. (8.) Not given to wine; not merely no drunkard, but never sitting long at the cups, or loving the glass. (9.) No striker; not passionate or quarrelsome. (10.) Not greedy of filthy lucre, and suspected of attachment to earthly gains and advantage; but, (11.) Patient; a pattern of meekness and long-suffering. (12.) Not a brawler; clamorous, contentious, and talkative; nor (13.) Covetous; seeking the fleece more than to feed the flock, and serving for hire, rather than for the love of men's souls. (14.) One that ruleth well his own house, with due discipline and authority; having his children in subjection with all gravity: for if a man know not how to rule his own house, and so to behave there as to preserve order and decorum, how shall he take care of the church of God, where so much more difficulty may be expected, and so much more prudence is necessary? (15.) Not a novice, and but lately acquainted with, and converted to, the faith of Christ; lest being lifted up with pride, thrusting himself arrogantly into an office for which he is not qualified, and ambitious of human honour, or popular applause, he fall into the condemnation of the devil, and sink the deeper from the height whereunto he affected to soar. (16.) Moreover, he must have a good report of them who are without; his conduct unsullied with any thing which would be an obstruction to his ministry; lest he fall into reproach, and grow contemptible, and into the snare of the devil.

Ere any man appears a candidate for the ministry, let him solemnly consider these things. It is not ease, or honour, or gain, or a genteel employment, that should lead us into the service: these are motives dishonourable, unhallowed, impious. Zeal for God, disinterested love of souls, must warm our bosoms, and unreserved devotedness of ourselves to Christ must mark each step. And Who is sufficient for these things, may we well say? The best qualified will be most conscious how short they come, and be looking constantly up to him who hath promised, Lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the world, Matt. xxviii. 20.

8. Likewise must [i] the deacons be grave, not double-tongued, not given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre; 9. [k] Holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience. 10. And let these also [l] first be proved; then let them use the office of a deacon, being found blameless. 11. [m] Even so must their wives be grave, not slanderers, sober, faithful in all things. 12. Let the deacons be [n] the husbands of one wife, ruling their children and their own houses well. 13. [o] For they that have ‡ used the office of a deacon well purchase to themselves a good degree, and great boldness in the faith which is in Christ Jesus.

Verses 8—13. We have,

1. The character of the deacons, whose office it was chiefly to take care of the outward matters of the church, assist the ministers, provide for the poor, and manage the public stock.

(1.) They must be grave, men of venerable deportment. (2.) Not double-tongued; warping the truth to please in different companies, and speaking with design or dissimulation. (3.) Not given to much wine, but persons of exemplary temperance. (4.) Not greedy of filthy lucre, lest they be tempted to embezzle the church's stock. (5.) Holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience; cleaving steadily to the simplicity of the gospel doctrines, and adorning them by a becoming conversation. (6.) And let these also first be proved; then let them use the office of a deacon, being found blameless; having undergone a proper examination, and being approved, let them be invested with their office. (7.) Let the deacons be the husbands of one wife, avoiding all divorce and polygamy; ruling their children and their own houses well; setting them a good example, and maintaining due order and regularity. For they that have used the office of a deacon well, with fidelity and diligence, true to the trust committed unto them, purchase to themselves a good degree of honour and respect in the church, and great boldness in the faith which is in Christ Jesus; God blessing such fidelity with an increase of grace, and greater openness and freedom in the profession of the gospel before men.

2. The character of the deacons' wives. Even so must their wives be grave, in manners, dress, speech, and deportment; not slanderers; speaking evil of persons behind their backs, and sowing discord in the church: sober, and free from excess: faithful in all things, that they may be a credit to their husbands, and adorn their station.

14. These things write I unto thee, [p] hoping to come unto thee shortly: 15. But, if I tarry long, [q] that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in [r] the house of God, which is the church [s] of the living God, the [t] pillar and ‖ ground of [u] the truth. 16. And, without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness: God was [x] manifest in the flesh, [y] justified in the spirit, [z] seen of angels, [a] preached unto the Gentiles, [b] believed on in the world, [c] received up into glory.

Verses 14—16. Though he hoped to be with him at Ephesus shortly, yet, lest the Lord should call him elsewhere, he had sent the above directions. These things write I unto thee, hoping to come unto thee shortly; but if I tarry long, and arrive not so soon as I purpose, I have sent this epistle, that thou mightest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth; which last words some refer to the church, where the truth is held forth as an inscription written on a pillar, and maintained with all steadfastness: others to Timothy himself, who was a firm pillar in that church; but best of all, they may be referred to Christ himself, the living God abiding in his own temple, and its true foundation and support. And without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness, especially in the following particulars; God was manifest in the flesh, and took our nature upon him. Justified in the Spirit, when by his resurrection he was declared free from every charge, and God's justice fully satisfied; seen of angels, when triumphant he ascended to the throne of majesty on high amidst their acclamations; preached to the Gentiles, as a Saviour to the uttermost, and freely inviting them to partake of all the blessings of his gospel: believed on in the world, both by Jews and Gentiles, notwithstanding the ignominy of his cross; received up into glory to possess the reward of his sufferings: or gloriously received, his gospel in the most astonishing manner spreading through the earth, and bringing vast multitudes of converts to the obedience of the faith. Note, (1.) The all-sufficiency of the atonement of Jesus depends upon the divine glory of his person. (2.) He who suffered on a cross was very God as well as very man. This is among the mysteries of godliness, where reason must bow down, and faith adore.

CHAP. IV.—ANNO DOMINI, 65.

St Paul here foretells, 1. A dreadful apostasy, ver. 1—3. 2. He treats of Christian liberty, ver. 4, 5. 3. He gives Timothy divers directions with respect to himself, his doctrine, and the people under his care, ver. 6. to the end.

1. NOW the Spirit [a] speaketh expressly, that in the latter times [b] some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils; 2. Verses 1—5. We have here the prophecy of that dire apostasy from the faith, which was of old foretold, and which we have seen so strikingly and dreadfully verified in the corruptions of the church of Rome. Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, in the prophetic writings, and by us who write under his immediate inspiration, that in the latter times of the present dispensation, some shall depart from the faith; and the marks of this apostasy he describes,

1. The departure will arise from giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils, or demons, reviving the errors of paganism in the worship of angels, dead saints, yea, their very relics, and making these a kind of mediators between God and them.

2. Speaking lies in hypocrisy; pretending to great zeal for the church and religion, yet propagating the most damnable heresies, such as justification by works, the free-will of man to good, &c. and by false legends, and forged miracles, deceiving the souls of the ignorant: having their consciences seared with a hot iron, and sticking at no abominations which may contribute to advance their wicked ends; even consecrating regicide, dispensing with the most solemn oaths, and counting every species of barbarity lawful, yea, laudable, to be perpetrated on those who oppose their destructive ways: witness the blood of martyrs, that by popish cruelty hath dyed so plentifully this land.

3. Forbidding to marry; speaking dishonourably of the ordinance itself, encouraging celibacy, and forbidding marriage to their clergy, monks, and nuns, in direct contradiction to God's word.

4. Commanding to abstain from meats, under the hypocritical show of self-denial; forbidding flesh in Lent, and enjoining fish instead of other animal food, which God hath created to be received, and eaten at all times, without distinction of days and seasons, if it be used with moderation and thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth. For every creature of God is good, and nothing, proper for food, to be refused, if it be received with thanksgiving; for it is sanctified for our use by the word of God, which declares there is nothing now common or unclean; and by prayer imploring his blessing, that we may use every creature-comfort to his glory. Note, Our common meals should be ever sanctified with devotion, and God's blessing be implored before we presume to use his gifts.

6. If [i] thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things, [k] thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ, nourished up in the words of faith and of good doctrine, whereunto thou hast attained. 7. [l] But refuse profane and old wives' fables, and exercise thyself rather unto godliness. 8. For bodily exercise profiteth [m] * little: but godliness is profitable unto all things, [n] having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come. 9. [o] This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation. 10. [p] For therefore we both labour and suffer reproach, because we [q] trust in the living God, who is the [r] Saviour of all men, [s] especially of those that believe. 11. [t] These things command and teach. 12. [u] Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an * example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity. 13. [y] Till I come, give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine. 14. [z] Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery. 15.

Verses 6—16. We have here,

1. The apostle's encouraging exhortation. If thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things, thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ, nourished up in the words of faith and of good doctrine, whereunto thou hast attained. Such fidelity to his trust would bring down the blessing of the Lord upon his soul, and prove his own abundant advantage. Note, Nothing is a greater means of edification to a minister's own soul, than his labours for the good of his brethren.

2. He quickens him to diligence in his Christian calling. But refuse profane and old wives' fables, the absurd genealogies and traditions of the Judaizing teachers; and exercise thyself rather unto godliness; strain every nerve to set forth the doctrines and duties of the gospel, and in thy own temper and conduct show thyself eminently exemplary. For bodily exercise, the most rigid observance of the externals of religion, profiteth little; but godliness, vital experimental religion, manifested in heart and life, is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, in the sanctified and happy use of worldly comforts, and of that which is to come, where God hath prepared for those that love him such good things as pass man's understanding. This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation, as a truth which will be proved infallibly certain by every real Christian, and none will ever have reason to repent a life of godliness. For therefore we both labour and suffer reproach, undismayed and unshaken, because we trust in the living God, who is able abundantly to fulfil his promises, and is the Saviour of all men, bestowing innumerable providential blessings upon them, and rescuing them from many miseries; but especially of those that believe; by his distinguishing grace and love bestowing upon them not only multiplied mercies in this world, but having purchased and secured for them an eternal salvation in heaven. Note, (1.) Though this world is not our home, nor our portion, yet, even here below, the truly godly are the most happy people. (2.) Christ hath a peculiar people, to whom he is in a special manner a Saviour, rescuing them from all spiritual evils, and bringing them to eternal blessedness.

3. He directs him particularly how to demean himself. These things command and teach with all authority. Let no man despise thy youth, nor give them any occasion to do so; but behave so as to engage and command reverence and respect: and be thou an example of the believers, in word, in all grave and edifying discourse, free from youthful levity; in conversation, strictly religious, and sincerely upright; in charity, fervent towards God, and the souls of men; in spirit, zealous for the cause of Jesus, and abounding in all the fruits of righteousness; in faith, unwavering, in profession bold; in purity of heart and conduct, without blemish or suspicion. Till I come, give attendance to reading the Scriptures in private, and in the congregation; to exhortation, bringing the word of God home to the consciences of the hearers, with warm application, for the conviction of some and the consolation and edification of others; to doctrine, clearly stating the great points of the Christian faith, and vindicating them from all opposers. Neglect not the gift that is in thee, but make the best improvement of the abilities with which God hath furnished you, and of the extraordinary gift which was given thee by prophecy, as some inspired men had foretold, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery, when you were ordained to the work of the ministry. Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them, with such evident devotedness of heart, such delight in the service, and such exemplariness of conduct, that thy profiting may appear to all. Take heed to thyself, as a minister and a Christian, and unto thy doctrine, that it may exactly correspond with the gospel word; for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself and them that hear thee. Note, (1.) They who show themselves examples to the flock, and evidently prove that they believe and practise themselves what they preach to others, though young, will necessarily command respect and reverence; whilst grey hairs, dishonoured by an unbecoming conduct, will be justly despised. (2.) They who are to teach others, should be much in prayer and reading the Scriptures, that they may lay in a fund of useful knowledge, and be full of matter for their public ministrations. An idle minister must needs be an unprofitable preacher. (3.) They who have the charge of immortal souls should be wholly engrossed with this great concern, and give themselves up to their awful employment. (4.) It is our great encouragement to fidelity in the ministry, that not only our own soul shall be saved, but that we shall be made happily instrumental to the eternal salvation of others, who will be our joy and crown in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Verses 1, 2. The apostle proceeds to give him farther directions concerning the needful, though less pleasing, work of rebuke. Ministers are reprovers by office, and must be faithful to this trust.

Rebuke not an elder, in years or office, if ought be found in him which demands censure, with a magisterial air, or unbecoming severity; but, with respect to his venerable years, entreat him as a father to remove the cause of offence; and the younger men as brethren; with all freedom, yet withal in love and meekness; the elder women as mothers, with due respect; the younger as sisters, with all purity; avoiding every thought, word, look, or gesture, that hath the most distant tendency to evil.

3. c Honour widows that are widows indeed. 4. But if any widow have children or * nephews, d let them learn first to shew † piety at home, and to requite their parents: e for it is good and acceptable before God. 5. f Now she that is a widow indeed, and desolate, trusteth in God, and continueth in supplications and prayers night and day. 6. g But she that liveth ‡ in pleasure is dead while she liveth. 7. h And these things give in charge, that they may be blameless. 8. i But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own ‖ house, he Verses 3—16. The apostle particularly directs Timothy how to behave in the case of widows who applied to be assisted out of the church's stock, and to be employed in pious offices under the direction of the deacons.

1. Honour widows that are widows indeed, really in distress, in need of assistance, and deserving to be placed on the church's list; and these he describes, ver. 7. Now she that is a widow indeed, and is desolate, without any friends to support her, trusteth in God, who is the friend of the friendless; and they who cast their care upon him shall not be destitute; and such a one continueth in supplications and prayers night and day; depending upon the Lord's providential help, and showing her undissembled piety. But she that liveth in pleasure, gaily, idly, and voluptuously, is dead while she liveth; dead to God and godliness, and in no wise to be received of the church, or supported from the common stock. And these things give in charge, that they may be blameless, and that no just offences may call for rebuke or censure. Note, A life of carnal pleasures is a state of real death; the soul there lies entombed in flesh, and such a person is really a living sepulchre.

2. If any widows have near relations capable of providing for them, the church ought not to be burdened with their maintenance. If any widow have children or nephews, or grand-children, let them learn first to show piety at home, and to requite their parents, by taking all care of them when labouring under age and infirmities; for that is good and acceptable before God; their bounden duty, and agreeable to his holy will. But if any, who make profession of the Christian name, refuse that assistance, which in such a case he is bound to afford, and provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, his aged parents, next to his wife and children, claiming a title to a maintenance, as parts of that family which depend on him for a provision, he hath denied the faith, by such a conduct and is worse than an infidel; even the very heathen will rise up to condemn a conduct so base and unnatural. Therefore, if any man or woman that believeth have widows, mothers, or grandmothers, let them relieve them, and let not the church be charged; that it may have sufficiency to relieve them that are widows indeed.

3. He points out the age and qualifications of those who should be entered on the poor's list, or be taken into office and employed by the church under the deacons. Let not a widow be taken into the number under threescore years old, having been the wife of one man, and never married to another after any divorce; well reported of for good works in her former better days; if she have brought up children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord; if she have lodged strangers, when brought by providence in her way; if she have washed the saints' feet, condescending to the lowest offices of charity; if she have relieved the afflicted, with her help, her counsel, and her substance; if she have diligently followed every good work.

4. But the younger widows refuse: for when they have begun to wax wanton against Christ, as they may be in danger of doing, they will then marry improperly, perhaps wickedly, into some heathen family; having thus damnation, because they have cast off their first faith, and apostatized from the profession which they once made; and withal they learn to be idle, wandering about from house to house in useless and impertinent visiting; and not only idlers, but tattlers also, and busy-bodies, officious and talkative, speaking things which they ought not, to the hurt of their neighbours' reputation, and to the disturbance of society.

17. [t] Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of [u] double honour, especially they who [x] labour in the word and doctrine. 18. For the scripture saith, [y] Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn: and, The labourer is worthy of his reward. 19. Against an elder receive not an accusation, but ‡ before [z] two or three witnesses. 20. Them that sin [a] rebuke before all, that others also may fear. 21. [b] I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels, that thou observe these things, [c] ‖without preferring one before another, doing nothing by partiality. 22. [d] Lay hands [e] suddenly on no man, neither be partaker of other men's sins: keep thyself pure. 23. [f] Drink no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake, and thine often infirmities. 24. [g] Some men's sins are open beforehand, going before to judgment; and some men they follow after. 25. Verses 17—25. The apostle here directs Timothy,

1. Concerning the proper maintenance of a gospel ministry. Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honour, highly esteemed and liberally provided for, especially they who labour in the word and doctrine, whose eminent zeal and diligence require a suitable acknowledgment; for the scripture saith, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn; but as he works he shall be freely allowed to eat; and our Lord hath said, The labourer is worthy of his reward. Note, The work of the ministry is laborious; and well do they who discharge it with zeal and diligence deserve an honourable provision.

2. Concerning the accusation of an elder. Against an elder receive not an accusation, but before two or three witnesses of character and credibility; and listen to no bare surmises or slanderous suggestions. Them that sin before all, being open, notorious, and scandalous offenders, rebuke before all, publicly and with sharpness, that others also may fear, respecting no man's rank or greatness. I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, the eternal Judge; and the elect angels, who are the spirits that minister to the heirs of salvation; that thou observe these things, without preferring one before another, not prejudging the cause through favour or affection; doing nothing by partiality, nor suffering any consideration to prejudice or bias your minds for or against any man, but deciding according to truth.

3. Concerning the ordination of ministers. Lay hands suddenly on no man to put him into the ministry, till he hath been thoroughly tried, and found faithful and able; neither be partakers of other men's sins, by conniving at the intrusion of unfit persons into the sacred office: keep thyself pure from the blood of all men, discountenancing all unbecoming behaviour, and in thy own conversation a pattern of purity and chastity.

4. Concerning his own health. Drink no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake, and thine often infirmities; indefatigable labour, and strict abstemiousness, preyed upon a tender constitution probably, and required in moderation something more supporting than water, to which he had confined himself. Note, The creatures of God are designed for our use and comfort; only let them be used with moderation; not to pamper the flesh, but so as to enable us the better to fulfil the duties of our station.

5. With regard to censure and ordination, of which he had before spoken, he farther observes, Some men's sins are open beforehand, going before to judgment, and being notorious, such are to be rejected from the ministry, and laid under the church's censure; and some men they follow after, and though they studiously conceal their sins, yet on deeper and closer examination, they will after a while come out; and therefore they should not hastily be admitted into sacred orders, without due probation. Likewise also the good works of some are manifest beforehand, their whole character strikingly exemplary, and their ministerial gifts eminent; so that they may be admitted without hesitation: and they that are otherwise cannot be hid, more caution is needful with those whose qualifications are dubious, and it requires some time to make it clear whether they should be received: for, if they are really corrupt in principle or practice they will soon betray themselves. Note, (1.) Before any be admitted into sacred orders, their character and qualifications should be well examined. An ignorant and scandalous ministry is the greatest reproach to any church. (2.) However secretly men may hide their sins, yet usually in time their true character appears, and at least at a judgment-day no veil can hide the workers of iniquity.

Verses 1—5. The apostle lays down,

1. The duty of Christian servants. Let as many servants as are under the yoke count their own masters worthy of all honour, respect, and dutiful obedience; that the name of God and his doctrine be not blasphemed, and that unbelievers may never have occasion to reproach them, as if their religion had made them proud, lazy, or disobedient. And they that have believing masters, let them not despise them because they are brethren, as if Christianity destroyed the distinctions of providence, and brought all men on a level; no, but rather do them service, with peculiar submission, delight, diligence, and honesty, because they are faithful and beloved, partakers of the benefit, sharing all the blessings of the gospel salvation. Note, (1.) The gospel was never designed to destroy the distinctions God hath been pleased to make among men, but to direct every man how to adorn that station in which it hath pleased God to call him. (2.) The kindness and condescension of Christian masters must never teach servants to presume, but to treat them with greater respect, more affectionate regard, and unimpeached fidelity.

2. He warns Timothy to teach steadily these truths, and to beware of deceivers. These things teach and exhort. If any man teach otherwise, as the Judaizing teachers, who suggest as if it were unlawful for Christian slaves to obey their unbelieving masters; and consent not to wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness, inculcating all dutiful discharge of our relations towards men, as well as piety towards God; he is proud, vainly puffed up with arrogant conceit of his own wisdom, though in fact knowing nothing as he ought to know; but doting about questions and strifes of words, engaging in vain and idle disputes about matters utterly insignificant, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings, perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, and who by such a spirit and temper evidently show, that they are destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness, serving merely their own worldly interests, and not the cause of Christ and immortal souls; from such withdraw thyself; have no communion with them, nor suffer them to assemble among the faithful. Note, (1.) The doctrines of the gospel are doctrines according to godliness: and whatever would corrupt vital and practical religion cannot be the words of our Lord Jesus Christ. (2.) Proud disputers must needs be far from any true knowledge of that gospel whose first injunctions are peace and love. (3.) They who make godliness in profession the ladder to earthly gain, will shortly find how fearful is their loss, when death shall hurl them into the abyss of wretchedness.

6. [f] But godliness with contentment is great gain. 7. [g] For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out. 8. [h] And having food and raiment, let us be therewith content. 9. [i] But they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. 10. [k] For the love of money is the root of all evil: which whilst some coveted after, they have * erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows. 11. [l] But thou, O man of God, flee these things, and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness. 12. [m] Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art also called, and hast professed a good profession before many witnesses.

Verses 6—12. From the mention of the abuses of some corrupters of godliness, the apostle,

1. Cautions Timothy against covetousness, and to possess a contented mind. But godliness with contentment is great gain, making the mind happy in every state of life, and under every dispensation of providence; and this is the truest and most substantial gain even here below, where all our creature-comforts are so precarious, insufficient, and perishing. For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out; but must return naked to the tomb, as we came from the womb. And, therefore, having food and raiment, covering for our bodies, and refreshment such as nature craves, let us be therewith content, nor grasp after more, thankful for the mercies of the day, and trusting the Lord for the provision of to-morrow. But they that will be rich, and, instead of being satisfied with their present allotted portion, are determined by every method to add to their store, and have their heart set upon wealth as their grand object; they fall into temptation and a snare, and become an easy prey to the devil, plunging themselves in the unhallowed pursuit after riches, into many foolish and hurtful lusts, into deceit, fraud, lying, rapine, injustice, &c. which drown men in destruction and perdition, and both body and soul perish for ever. For the love of money is the root of all evil, and the source of every vile and scandalous action: which while some have coveted after, we have seen the dreadful issue, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows; besides all their crosses and vexations, laying up much bitterness for themselves, if they should hereafter be brought to repentance; and if not, treasuring up wrath against the day of wrath. But thou, O man of God, flee these things, be warned by other sad examples, and shun with abhorrence all such covetous principles and practices. Note, (1.) There is no true contentment in this world but that which springs from real godliness. (2.) We consult our truest interests when our souls are our first concern. (3.) It is a mortifying reflection to every worldling, how short-lived must be his enjoyments, and that he can carry nothing with him to the grave but a shroud and a coffin. (4.) Nature is satisfied with little, grace with less, but covetousness with nothing. (5.) They who will be rich are in the high road to ruin; Satan desires no fairer mark. (6.) The love of money hath destroyed more than any one other vice whatever. (7.) They who, to gain the world, lose their own souls, will prove shortly their folly to be great as their sin.

2. He enjoins him what was his proper pursuit. Follow after righteousness, in your transactions with men; godliness, and holiness of heart and life; faith, an increasing measure of this divine grace, and approved fidelity in all your conversation; love to God and men; patience under every provocation; and meekness, bearing with, and gently instructing those that oppose themselves: yet, showing withal a becoming zeal for the truth, fight the good fight of faith against all opposing foes, from earth, or hell, or inbred corruption; lay hold on eternal life, earnestly pressing towards the goal for the glorious prize, whereunto thou art also called by divine grace, as a Christian and an evangelist; and hast professed a good profession before many witnesses at thy ordination, and in the presence of those among whom thou hast preached and suffered for the gospel's sake. Note, (1.) We are engaged in an arduous warfare, and have need and must fight every step to heaven against a host of spiritual foes which oppose our progress. (2.) Eternal life, the glorious crown before us, should animate us for every conflict. (3.) The good profession we have once made should engage us with increasing diligence to approve our fidelity before God and man.

13. [n] I give thee charge in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, and before Christ Jesus, who before Pontius Pilate [o] witnessed a good † confession; 14. [p] That thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukeable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ: 15. Which in his times he shall shew, who is [q] the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords; 16. Who [r] only hath immortality, [s] dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto; [t] whom no man hath seen, nor can see: [u] to whom be honour and power everlasting. Amen. 17. [x] Charge them that are rich in this world, [y] that they be not high-minded, [z] nor trust in ‡ uncertain riches, but in the [a] living God, [b] who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; 18. [c] That they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, || willing to communicate; 19. [d] Laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may [e] lay hold on eternal life. 20. O Timothy, [f] keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called. 21. Which some professing, [g] have erred concerning the faith. Grace be with thee. Amen.

Verses 13—21. The apostle concludes,

1. With repeating his solemn charge, and enforcing it with the most cogent arguments. I charge thee in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, the author of life to all his creatures, and the giver of spiritual life to his chosen; and before Christ Jesus, whose minister thou art, and who himself before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession, boldly asserting his own glorious character and office; that thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukeable, faithful to the solemn trust reposed in thee, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ at the great day: which in his times, fixed in the eternal counsels, he shall show, exactly accomplishing the promise of his coming, which he hath given to his people, according to the glorious names and characters which he bears, who is the blessed and only Potentate, to whom all in heaven and earth are subject, who hath the supreme and universal dominion: and, as he is infinitely blessed in himself, he makes also his people happy under his government: the King of kings, and Lord of lords, who all from him derive their power and authority, and to him are accountable; who only hath immortality in and of himself, and is the author of it to his creatures, whether angels or men; dwelling in uncreated glory, in the light which no man, in his present mortal state, can approach unto; whom no man hath seen or can see, in the full blaze of his divine perfections and attributes: to whom be honour and power everlasting ascribed by all the hosts of earth and heaven. Amen!

2. He gives him a particular charge to be delivered to the more opulent members of the church. Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high minded, puffed up on their worldly wealth and attainments: nor trust in uncertain riches as their dependence and rock, since these are transitory possessions; but in the living God, the only substantial and abiding good, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy, loading us with his benefits, and allowing us all sanctified use of his creatures: wherefore they who are thus favoured must see that they do good with their wealth, not abusing it in luxury and extravagance; but that they be rich in good works, employing their treasures for the benefit of mankind; ready to give, even unasked, to the indigent and necessitous; willing to communicate of their substance, without grudging or niggardliness; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, disposing of their treasures in such a way as that they may have treasure in heaven, and lay hold on eternal life. Note, (1.) Wealth is a talent intrusted with us for the benefit of our brethren: we are stewards, and must give an account of our profiting to the great Master. (2.) Riches are a great temptation to pride; therefore, such as have affluence should be often admonished in their high estate to keep a humble mind. (3.) They are truly rich who are rich unto God, and improve their abundance to his glory.

3. He warns him, as before, to take heed of deceivers. O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, the unadulterated gospel word; avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called, the noisy talk and proud boastings of Judaizing teachers, pretending to high attainments in science, when in fact utter strangers to true wisdom: which some professing, have erred concerning the faith, and apostatized from the truth. Note, That science which draws men from the simplicity of the gospel, however proud men may value themselves thereon, will be proved at last to be the most egregious folly.

4. He gives him his parting benediction. Grace be with thee, and that shall preserve thee from all error, and strengthen thee for the faithful discharge of the ministry. Amen!

A PRACTICAL COMMENT

UPON THE

SECOND EPISTLE OF ST PAUL

TO

TIMOTHY.

Introduction.

THIS second epistle Paul wrote to Timothy from Rome, when he was a prisoner there, and in danger of his life. By these words, I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand, chap. iv. ver. 6. it appears that his removal out of this world, in his own apprehension, was not far off; especially considering the rage and malice of his persecutors; and that he had been brought before the emperor Nero, which he calls his first answer when no man stood with him, but all men forsook him, chap iv. ver. 16. And interpreters agree that this was the last epistle he wrote.

Where Timothy now was, is not certain: The scope of this epistle somewhat differs from that of the former, not so much relating to his office as an evangelist, as to his personal conduct and behaviour.

CHAP. I.—ANNO DOMINI, 66.

After his introduction, ver. 1, 2. we have, 1. Paul's sincere love to Timothy, ver. 3—5. 2. Divers exhortations given to him, ver. 6—14. 3. He speaks of Phygellus and Hermogenes, with others, and closes with Onesiphorus, ver. 15. to the end.

1. PAUL, [a] an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, according to [b] the promise of life which is in Christ Jesus, 2. To Timothy, my [c] dearly beloved son: [d] Grace, mercy, and peace, from God the Father, and Christ Jesus our Lord. 3. [e] I thank God, whom [f] I serve from my forefathers with pure conscience, [g] that without ceasing I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day; 4. [h] Greatly desiring to see thee, being mindful of thy tears, that I may be filled with joy; 5. When I call to remembrance the [i] unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois, and thy [k] mother Eunice; and I am persuaded that in thee also.

Verses 1—5. St Paul opens this epistle,

1. With his apostolic salutation to Timothy. Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, acting under a divine commission, according to the promise of life which is in Christ Jesus, who hath for his people brought life and immortality to light by his gospel; To Timothy, my dearly beloved son, begotten by me in the gospel, and sharing my warmest paternal affection; Grace, mercy, and peace, with all the unutterable blessings therein contained, be with thee, from God the Father, and Christ Jesus our Lord. Note, (1.) True ministers of Christ feel the tenderest regard for their spiritual children, and cease not incessantly to pray that the best of blessings may descend upon them. (2.) All our mercies come to us as the free gift of God in Jesus Christ, whether the present pardon, peace, and grace which we receive here, or the promise of immortal life and glory which we expect hereafter.

2. He thanks God for him. I thank God, whom I serve from my forefathers, as a true child of Abraham, and descendant of the patriarchs, with a pure conscience, purged now from dead works by a Redeemer's blood, that without ceasing I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day, which I statedly offer at a throne of grace morning and evening; greatly desiring to see thee, being mindful of thy tears, and the distress which appeared at our last parting, that I may be filled with joy, if the Lord so pleases, by our happy meeting again; and it the more engages my heart to thee, when I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee, and which hath been proved on so many occasions, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice; and I am persuaded that in thee also, who treadeth in the same steps. Note, (1.) It is a singular blessing to have religious parents, for though grace comes not by education, yet God often blesses effectually their labours, who study to bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. (2.) Where unfeigned faith dwells, there every good fruit and gracious disposition will naturally be produced.

6. Wherefore I put thee in remembrance [l] that thou stir up the gift of God which is in thee by the [m] putting on of my hands. 7. [n] For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind. 8. [o] Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me his prisoner: but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel according to the power of God; 9. Who [p] hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, [q] not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began; 10. [r] But is now made manifest by the appearing of our Saviour Jesus Christ, who hath [s] abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel: 11. [t] Whereunto I am appointed a preacher, and an apostle, and a teacher of the Gentiles. 12. For the which cause I also [u] suffer these things: nevertheless [x] I am not ashamed; for I know whom I have * believed, and I am persuaded that [y] he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day. 13. [z] Hold fast the form of sound words, which thou hast heard of me, in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus. 14. [a] That good thing which was committed unto thee keep by the Holy Ghost which dwelleth in us.

Verses 6—14. The apostle here,

1. Stirs up his dear son to the vigorous exercise of his ministry. Wherefore I put thee in remembrance, that thou stir up the gift of God which is in thee, blowing the embers of divine love and zeal into a flame, and making the most profitable use of those distinguished spiritual gifts which God hath bestowed upon thee, by the putting on of my hands. For God hath not given us the spirit of fear, that we should be discouraged by opposition, but of power, to bear up against every enemy undismayed, and of love to Christ and men's souls, which all the waters of persecution cannot quench, and of a sound mind, settled in the doctrines of truth, steady in attachment to them, and willing cheerfully to suffer for them. May such a spirit be in every minister!

2. He exhorts him boldly to take up his cross. Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me his prisoner, for they are honourable bonds, which are borne for the sake of Jesus and his cause; but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel, sympathizing with those that suffer, and willing to endure any persecutions on account of it, according to the power of God, which is engaged for the support of all those who are faithful. Note, (1.) All Christians, and ministers especially, must prepare for the cross, and expect it. (2.) They who dare commit their all to God, and look up to him for help, shall experience his Almighty assistance in every time of need.

3. He suggests the strongest motives to engage his fidelity to God and his gospel. Who hath saved us with an everlasting salvation in the Son of his love, Christ Jesus, and hath called us with a holy calling by the word of his gospel, that we might be separate from a world that lieth in wickedness, and sanctified for his honour and glory, not according to our works, for the sake of any goodness foreseen in us, or works done by us; for all that we were, and could do, was an abomination in his sight; but our salvation was according to his own sovereign purpose and grace, which was, in God's eternal design and predestination, given us in Christ, the head and representative of his elect, before the world began, or any creature had their being, but is now made manifest by the appearing of our Saviour Jesus Christ, who, coming in the human nature, hath made the richest discoveries of God's grace to perishing sinners; and, by dying upon the cross as their substitute, hath abolished death, delivering them from the wages of sin, the curse of the law, and all the fearful consequences thereof in time and eternity, and hath brought life and immortality to light by the gospel, giving a brighter and clearer revelation of the eternal blessedness prepared for body and soul in a better world, and of the way which only leads thereto, than had ever before been made to the sons of men. Note, (1.) All who are effectually called of God, experience the power of his Spirit upon their hearts as a Spirit of holiness. (2.) Those who are saved by grace in time, were saved in the divine purpose from eternity, and their stability and perseverance secured in Christ Jesus before the world began. (3.) Every redeemed soul may regard death as a vanquished foe; since the sting of sin is taken out, we have nothing to fear, but every thing to hope, whilst in the grave we see the golden gates of life and immortality unfolded, and the bright beams of everlasting glory illuminating the dark valley of the shadow of death.

4. He proposes to him his own example. Whereunto I am appointed a preacher, and an apostle, and a teacher of the Gentiles, and count it my highest honour. For the which cause I also suffer these things, being now the prisoner of Jesus Christ, for my fidelity in maintaining the privileges of the Gentiles; nevertheless I am not ashamed, neither of the gospel, nor of the chain he wore for the sake of it, for I know whom I have believed, the glories of his person, and the riches of his grace; and I am persuaded that he is able, as his promises assure me he is willing, to keep that which I have committed to him, even the precious deposit of my immortal soul, against that day, that great day of his appearing and glory. Note, (1.) Though we suffer for the gospel, we need not be ashamed; the cause will gloriously support us. (2.) What we have committed to Christ is safe for eternity: he never hath failed those that trust him: blessed and happy the soul that can say, I know whom I have believed.

5. He exhorts him to fidelity. Hold fast the form of sound words, the sacred, unadulterated oracles of God, and the pure doctrines of the gospel, which thou hast heard of me, in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus; copy the pattern of my preaching, especially in these fundamental articles; and as thy faith in, and love to, the Redeemer hath appeared, with all fidelity and warm affection to the souls of men, urge upon them the said blessed truths. That good thing which was committed unto thee by the Holy Ghost who dwelleth in us; be faithful to the solemn trust committed to thee, and by the power of the Holy Ghost, who abides in the hearts of all his people; with persevering diligence maintain the purity of the gospel. Note, (1.) Jesus is the glorious object of our faith and love, and to him should our hearts for ever cleave. (2.) The Lord must keep us, or we cannot keep ourselves; and the indwelling energy of the Holy Ghost alone can enable us for the discharge of every sacred trust which he hath committed to us.

15. This thou knowest, [b] that all they which are in Asia be turned away from me; of whom are Phygellus and Hermogenes. 16. [c] The Lord give mercy unto the house of Onesiphorus; for he oft refreshed me, and [d] was not ashamed of my chain: 17. But, when he was [e] in Rome, he sought me out very diligently, and found me. 18. The Lord grant unto him [f] that he may find mercy of the Lord in that day: and in how many things he ministered unto me at Ephesus, thou knowest very well.

[f] Mat. 5. 7. Acts 3. 19. Rom. 15. 25. 2 Thes. 1. 10. ch. 4. 8. Heb. 6. 16.

Verses 15—18. To engage his dear son Timothy's fidelity, he mentions the apostasy of some as a warning, and the steadfastness of Onesiphorus as an encouragement to him.

1. The apostasy of some. This thou knowest, that all they who are in Asia are turned away from me, either the generality of the Asiatic churches and ministers, or rather such of the Asiatics as were at Rome, who were ashamed of his chain, and disowned him in his prison, of whom are Phygellus and Hermogenes. Note, It is one of the bitterest pangs of suffering, to feel ourselves then deserted by those from whom we might reasonably, from their professions, have expected the greatest comfort and support.

2. The steadfastness of Onesiphorus. The Lord give mercy unto the house of Onesiphorus; probably he was an Ephesian, and absent from his family with the apostle, whom he attended and served with great fidelity and zeal, and therefore the grateful Paul in return pays him with his prayers, begging that the choicest blessings of God might descend upon him and his; for he oft refreshed me with seasonable visits, and supplies of necessaries, and was not ashamed of my chain, when cowardice and fear of reproach basely deterred others from coming near me. But when he was in Rome, he sought me out very diligently, and found me. The Lord grant unto him that he may find mercy of the Lord in that day, when Jesus shall come to reward every kindness shown to his servants, especially to those who are suffering for righteousness' sake. And in how many things he ministered unto me at Ephesus, thou knowest very well. Note, (1.) When we can make no other return to our kind friends, at least in our prayers we are bound to recommend them to the Saviour's mercy, and beg him to reward them. (2.) That day! How should it be ever in our view, that great decisive day, when our eternity of happiness or misery must be determined! (3.) We have nothing to cry for at God's hands but mercy; living or dying, the best have no merit to plead, but must expect eternal life as the gift of God through Jesus Christ our Lord.

CHAP. II.—ANNO DOMINI, 66.

In this chapter, 1. He encourages him in his work, showing him from whence he must fetch help, ver. 1. 2. He must take care of a succession in the ministry, ver. 2. 3. He exhorts him to constancy and perseverance in this work, &c. ver. 3—15. 4. He must shun profane and vain babblings, ver. 16—18. for they will be pernicious and mischievous. 5. He speaketh of the foundation of God which standeth sure, ver. 19—21. 6. What he is to avoid, youthful lusts, and foolish and unlearned questions; and what to do, ver. 22. to the end.

1. THOU therefore, [a] my son, [b] be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus. 2. And [c] the things that thou hast heard of me * among many witnesses, the same [d] commit thou to faithful men, who Verses 1—7. The apostle in this chapter continues his exhortations. Thou therefore, my son, be strong in the grace that is in Jesus Christ, sensible of thy own weakness, and dependent upon him who alone can enable thee for the arduous work. And the things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, publicly declared, and proved by numerous testimonies of the law and the prophets, the same commit thou to faithful men, whose sincerity and abilities have been tried and approved, who shall be able to teach others also, and preserve the glorious truths of gospel grace unadulterated. Thou therefore endure hardness, all those persecutions and afflictions, to which, in the gospel warfare, thou must be exposed, acquitting thyself as a good soldier of Jesus Christ, fighting manfully under his banners, with such courage, patience, and perseverance, as may effectually secure the crown. No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life; his military service is incompatible with the pursuit of any other trade or profession; he must be at his general's call, and ever ready to obey his orders, that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier; so must every minister of Christ be disengaged from worldly concerns, that he may be wholly employed in the service of the great Captain of our salvation, and make it his whole study and care to please him, and advance the interests of his kingdom. And if a man strive for masteries in the Olympic games, yet is he not crowned with that fading crown the reward of victory, except he strive lawfully, according to the rules prescribed; and much more should they, who have before them a crown of glory incorruptible, exert every effort, according to the orders of their Divine Master, to win the eternal prize. The husbandman that laboureth must be first partaker of the fruits, or the husbandman must labour first before he partakes of the fruits; so must the faithful minister labour for the good of immortal souls, and patiently wait for the success of his ministry, and the expected reward in the day of Christ. Consider what I say; and the Lord give thee understanding in all things, enabling thee to make a deep application of these things to thy own soul; and, as a valiant soldier, a brave combatant, and laborious husbandman, to acquit thyself in thy ministerial office. Note, Let all who look to the ministry consider these things, and count the cost before they presume to appear a candidate for the service.

8. Remember that Jesus Christ, [k] of the seed of David, [l] was raised from the dead according to [m] my gospel: 9. [n] Wherein I suffer trouble, as an evil-doer, even unto bonds; but [o] the word of God is not bound. 10. [p] Therefore I

Verses 8—13. To encourage him boldly to suffer, the apostle suggests,

1. The grand foundation of their hope, as built upon the resurrection of Jesus. Remember that Jesus Christ, the promised Messiah, of the seed of David, in his human nature, was raised from the dead, showing thereby the complete redemption which he had obtained for his people, according to my gospel which I preached unto you.

2. He sets before him his own example: Wherein, that is, for preaching which gospel, I suffer trouble as an evil-doer, even unto bonds; but the word of God is not bound: even in my prison the gospel still runs and is glorified in the conversion of many souls, and others boldly labour and at large, though I am confined. Therefore, dependent upon the power of God, I suffer all these things for the elect's sakes, willing to endure, if I am called thereunto, even death itself, that they may also obtain (confirmed in the faith by my unshaken steadfastness in suffering for it) the salvation which is in Jesus Christ with eternal glory, of which, from first to last, he is the author, finisher, and bestower, on all his chosen, and they are wholly indebted for it to his sovereign grace and love. Note, (1.) A noble example is a powerful encouragement to follow on. (2.) Though persecutors may confine the ministers, the word of God will still work effectually on as many as the Lord will call. (3.) All the elect shall infallibly obtain eternal salvation, for Christ hath secured it for them, and will bring them to be with himself where he is, that they may behold his glory.

3. The reward of faithful suffering should engage him boldly to take up the cross. It is a faithful saying; For if we be dead with him, as vitally united to him in his death, or if called to die for his cause as he died for us, we shall also live with him, planted also in the likeness of his resurrection, and raised up to immortal life and glory: if we suffer for him, we shall reign with him, sitting down on his throne: but if we prove faithless, and deny him in the hour of temptation, he also will deny and disown us in the great day of his appearing: if we believe not, yet he abideth faithful; his promises and threatenings will surely be accomplished, whether men believe them or not: he is immutable, and cannot deny himself, or falsify his word. Note, (1.) It is our privilege to suffer, when we see that the issue will be glorious. (2.) The hope of life with Jesus should raise us superior to all the fears of death, though in its most tremendous form. (3.) They who, for any worldly interest or advantage, or to avoid shame, reproach, or suffering, disown the Lord Jesus, his gospel, and suffering servants, will bear in eternity their burden, and be driven from his presence with everlasting contempt.

14. [u] Of these things put them in remembrance, charging them before the Lord that they [x] strive not about words to no profit, but to the subverting of the hearers. 15. [y] Study to shew thyself Verses 14—18. The apostle proceeds to give further exhortations to Timothy.

1. To seek the edification of those under his charge. Of these things put them in remembrance, charge them, with all solemnity and authority, before the Lord, as in his presence, that they strive not about words to no profit, but to the subverting of the hearers, drawing them from the purity of the gospel, instead of promoting godly edifying. Note, Any trivial matter will afford occasion of strife to a contentious spirit.

2. He enjoins him to show himself an able minister of Jesus Christ. Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, diligent, faithful, laborious, skilful, rightly dividing the word of truth, and giving to each his portion in due season, according to the various cases and conditions of the people's souls. But shun profane and vain babblings, the dreams of the Judaizing teachers, for they will increase unto more ungodliness, and lead to the most pernicious errors in principle and practice. And their word will eat as doth a canker, corroding the hearts of the hearers, and threatening their eternal death: of whom is Hymeneus and Philetus, the chief heretical seducers; who concerning the truth have erred, saying that the resurrection is past already; probably they asserted, that the resurrection was only mystical and spiritual, not of the body but of the soul: and have overthrown the faith of some. Note, (1.) Error is spreading as a gangrene; and, though it may appear little at first, threatens the most fatal consequences. (2.) They who love to hear themselves talk, will be sure to prove the truth of that Scripture, that in the multitude of words there wanteth not folly. (3.) A true minister will labour to speak ever to the purpose, not curious about a fine harangue, but careful to apply the word of truth to the consciences of his hearers.

Verses 19—21. Among all the errors of deceivers, this is nevertheless our comfort:

1. That the foundation of God standeth sure: the faith of God's elect can never be destroyed, however many false professors prove apostates; and God's designs of grace towards them cannot be frustrated by any designs of the most subtle deceivers, for their stability is secured, having this seal, the Lord knoweth them that are his, and embraces them with the arms of everlasting love, from which neither men nor devils can pluck them: and, in consequence of his sealing his people until the day of redemption, this is his expectation from them, and will be their practice, Let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity, and by the fruits of sanctification prove the certainty of their election.

2. But as in a great house there are not only vessels of gold and of silver, but also of wood and of earth; and some to honour, and some to dishonour; so it need not be thought strange, that in the visible church, while some professors adorn the gospel, others appear a scandal to the name they bear, a dishonour to the Redeemer, and will, at the last, be rejected by him. If a man therefore purge himself from these errors and practices of the seducing teachers, he shall be a vessel unto honour, sanctified and meet for the master's use, and prepared unto every good work, employed by him on earth with approbation, and after having finished the work which he hath given them to do below, shall be removed to shine in his better temple of eternal glory above. Lord, may my lot be with these!

Verses 22—26. Some personal directions are here given to the young evangelist.

1. Flee youthful lusts, not merely those of the flesh, but the more dangerous ones of pride, love of pre-eminence, and popular applause, those fatal rocks against which so many make shipwreck, and need be shunned with peculiar care.

2. Follow righteousness towards God and men, faith, charity, peace, with all the other train of heavenly tempers which abide in them who call on the Lord out of a pure heart. Note, They who are Christians indeed, are constant at a throne of grace, and, in purity of heart and life, prove their professions sincere.

3. But foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they do gender strifes, and open a field of endless and unprofitable controversy. And the servant of the Lord must not strive; the follower of the Lamb of God should copy the pattern of his meekness, not quarrelsome, but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach in the most inoffensive way, patient under the provocations of the most untractable, and the prejudices of the weak. In meekness instructing those that oppose themselves, against the gospel doctrines; mildly arguing, and gently remonstrating, desirous to win them by love, and overcome them by kindness; if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth, as it is in Jesus; and that they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will, as birds in the snare of the fowler, where they must lie and perish, unless divine grace breaks the snare, and delivers the miserable soul. Note, (1.) Nothing is more necessary for a minister than unwearied patience and meekness. (2.) We must labour for the souls of men, but God only can give them repentance. (3.) The gospel word is the great instrument which the Lord employs for the conversion of the heart. (4.) They are the vilest of slaves who are led at the devil's beck to the service of divers lusts and pleasures; and happy it is for the soul that is delivered from this dreadful servitude by the power of divine grace, and brought into the glorious liberty of the sons of God.

Verses 1—5. The apostle apprizes Timothy of the dangerous days which approached, that he might not be surprised when the offences came. This know, also, that in the last days perilous times shall come, when sad corruptions, creeping into the church, shall make it difficult to preserve a pure conscience. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, wholly devoted to the pursuits of their worldly honour and interests; covetous, insatiate after filthy lucre; proud, and vain-glorious boasters; blasphemers of God and man: disobedient to parents: unthankful to their benefactors; unholy in heart and conversation; without natural affection, which appears even in brutes; truce-breakers, perfidious to the most solemn engagements; false accusers; like devils incarnate, blackening with every opprobrious calumny their opponents: incontinent, indulging every bestial appetite; fierce and furious in their tempers; despisers of those that are good, and treating men, far their betters, with contempt; traitors, false to their trusts, betraying their nearest friends; heady, driving furiously in their wicked courses, impatient of control; high-minded, puffed up with vain conceit of their own superiority; lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God, and what is the aggravation of all their other abominations, making great pretensions to piety, having a form of godliness, and affecting rigid attachment to the externals of worship, but denying the power of it, real enemies to vital religion; from such turn away, and shun them as the plague.

These corruptions began in the Gnostics, which in the apostle's days appeared, and the perilous times advanced to their height when the Roman pontiffs, after a train of diabolical practices, raised their blasphemous hierarchy, and consecrated their abominations. And to the papal apostasy are all these characters strikingly applicable.

6. For of this sort are they [g] which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts, 7. [h] Ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. 8. Now, as [i] Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth: [k] men of corrupt minds, † reprobate concerning the faith. 9. [l] But they shall proceed no further: for their folly shall be manifest unto all men, as theirs also was.

Verses 6—9. The apostle proceeds,

1. To point out the artful and pernicious practices of the seducers. For of this sort are they which creep into houses with every wheedling art, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts, imposing upon them with flattering speeches, and gaining them to their party, ever learning of these vain teachers, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth, but bewildered in the endless mazes of error. Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, setting up their pretended miracles in opposition to his divine commission, so do these also resist the truth of the gospel: men of the like corrupt minds as these Egyptian sorcerers, reprobate concerning the faith, rejected and abhorred of God.

2. He foretells that all their efforts should be impotent. But they shall proceed no further than the magicians did, nor be able to deceive the elect; for an effectual check shall be given to them, and their folly shall be manifest unto all men, as theirs also was, and all their lying miracles shall be detected. Note, Error may, for a time, prevail, but truth shall finally be triumphant.

10. But [m] thou hast fully known my doctrine, manner of life, purpose, faith, long-suffering, charity, patience, 11. [n] Persecutions, afflictions, which came unto me at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lystra; what persecutions I endured: but out of them all the Lord delivered me. 12. Yea, [o] and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. 13. But [p] evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived.

Verse 10—13. Nothing could better serve to guard Timothy against these seducers than the striking contrast between their conduct and that of the blessed Paul.

1. He reminds him of what he had seen. But thou hast fully known my doctrine, and the uniform tenor of my preaching; my exemplary manner of life, steady purpose to advance God's glory and the good of men's souls, unshaken faith, fervent charity, unwearied patience, amidst the many and grievous persecutions, afflictions, which came unto me at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lystra: what persecutions I endured: but out of them all the Lord delivered me. With such an example Timothy should be animated to fidelity, and might surely expect the same support and deliverances.

2. He informs him that suffering must be every Christian's lot. Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution, of one kind or other, from mockery to martyrdom. There is indeed a godliness in form that the world speaks well of; but to be godly in Christ Jesus, in spirit and temper conformed to him, will ever render us abhorred of a world that lieth in wickedness.

3. He predicts the fatal end of these deceivers. But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, hurried on from one excess of wickedness to another, deceiving and being deceived, till, having filled up the measure of their iniquities, they perish with the arch-deceiver in everlasting burnings.

Verses 14—17. As he would be exposed to great temptations, the apostle exhorts him to cleave to the scriptures, as the only infallible guide to truth.

But continue thou in the things which thou hast learned, and hast been assured of, the pure and unadulterated doctrines of the gospel, which, on the most satisfying evidence, thou hast believed, knowing of whom thou hast learned them, even from me, divinely commissioned from the great Redeemer: and that from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures, early initiated in these sacred records, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus, who is the sum and substance of the whole, and to whom both the law and the prophets bear witness. All scripture is given by inspiration of God, both the Old and New Testaments have the same divine original; and is profitable for doctrine, none demanding our credence and submission, but what can be clearly proved from thence; for reproof of errors, heresies, and all manner of evil; for correction of whatever is found amiss in the church; for instruction in righteousness, how righteousness before God can be obtained, through faith in a Redeemer, and how we can be enabled so to walk as to please God: that the man of God, the true believer, may be perfect, thoroughly instructed in all the mind of God, and furnished unto all good works, whether as a Christian for those of his station, or as a minister for the arduous service in which he is engaged. Note, (1.) Parents should betimes endeavour to lead their children to the Bible. (2.) All the volumes of human learning can never teach us so much true wisdom as one page, one line of the book of God; after all these labours we must have been left to perish in ignorance; but in the oracles of truth, life and immortality are brought to light, and the poorest and most unlettered saint of God is wiser, in the things which make for his everlasting peace, than the deepest metaphysician, or the most profound philosopher. (3.) All scripture is of divine authority, therefore on God's testimony to be received with faith. Our wisdom, where ought mysterious is revealed, is not to reason, but to believe. (4.) The book of God is the Christian's great magazine; he can be in no state and condition, but he will there find direction, instruction, reproof, or comfort, exactly suited to his circumstances.

CHAP. IV.—ANNO DOMINI, 66.

In this chapter St Paul, 1. Doth with great solemnity and earnestness press Timothy to the diligent and conscientious discharge of his work and office, as an evangelist: and the charge given to him, all gospel ministers are to take to themselves, ver. 1—5. 2 Why must Timothy now be instant in season, &c. in a particular manner? Because the church was likely to be deprived of the apostle's labours, for his departure was at hand, ver. 6—8. 3. Divers particular matters, with a hint and caution about Alexander the coppersmith, ver. 9—16. 4. He informeth him of what befell him at his first answer; though men forsook him, the Lord stood by him, and that encouraged him to hope for future deliverance, ver. 16—18. And then he concludes with salutations and a benediction, ver. 19, to the end.

1. I [a] CHARGE thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, [b] who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom; 2. [c] Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; [d] reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long-suffering and doctrine. 3. For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; 4. [e] And they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables. 5. [f] But watch thou in all things, [g] endure afflictions, [h] do the work of an evangelist, [i] make full proof of thy ministry. 6. For I am now [k] ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. 7. [l] I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: 8. Henceforth there is laid up for me [m] a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, [n] the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that [o] love his appearing.

Verses 1—8. The apostle being now ready to conclude his epistle, gives Timothy,

1. His solemn charge. I charge thee before the great heart-searching God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom, in the last great day, when he shall come in his glory, and give to every man according to his work; preach the word, proclaiming, as a herald aloud, the blessed gospel; be instant in season, and as some may think, out of season; earnest to inculcate the truth upon men's consciences, both on the Lord's day, and every other opportunity, not only in time of peace, but amidst all opposition and persecution: reprove, rebuke gainsayers, backsliders, sinners; exhort and encourage the faithful, with all long-suffering, unwearied in the service, not discouraged at any difficulties in the way, and with that doctrine, which is according to the scriptures, and profitable for the souls of men. Note, (1.) Ministers must not only preach, but be instant; frozen discourses, languidly delivered, will never fire the hearer's soul. (2.) They who have the work of Christ at heart, will be perhaps often thought very unseasonable in the frequency of their public ministrations, or the freedom of their private rebukes; but they have here a divine warrant.

2. He warns him how difficult it will prove to be faithful amidst the abounding errors. For the time will come, and the mystery of iniquity already begins to operate, when they will not endure sound doctrine, the pure gospel of Jesus Christ, but after their own depraved lusts and passions, shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears, desiring to have their fancies entertained, and their corruptions flattered, instead of the free, honest, and faithful rebuke which the gospel ministers deliver. And they shall turn away their ears from the truth, averse from it, and refusing to obey it, and shall be turned unto fables, listening to the seducing teachers, who with idle tales amuse, and with falsehood lull their consciences asleep. Note, They who like to be flattered in their sins, rather than to hear faithful reproof, are justly given up to their own delusions, and the blind are suffered to follow the blind, till both fall into the pit of hell.

3. He admonishes Timothy to guard against these deceivers, and to caution the people that they be not imposed upon. But watch thou in all things over thy own heart, and over the church committed to thy care, guarding against the first appearances of evil and error: endure afflictions with fortitude and patience: do the work of an evangelist with all fidelity and zeal; make full proof of thy ministry, that gainsayers may be silenced, and believers comforted and edified.

4. He informs Timothy of his approaching dissolution and glorious hope for his encouragement to follow his steps. For I am now ready to be offered up, and to pour out my blood as a libation in the service of the gospel: and the time of my departure is at hand, when my disembodied soul shall go to the bosom of my Lord. I have fought a good fight, and through grace can look back with satisfaction on my warfare; I have finished my course, and am near the glorious prize; I have kept the faith, maintained the purity of the doctrines of Christ, and adorned them by unimpeached fidelity in my own conversation. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, the rewarder of those whom he hath chosen and called, and strengthened for the conflict, shall give me at that day of his appearing and glory: and not to me only, but unto all them also who love his appearing, and live under the influence, and in the prospect and earnest expectation of it. Note, (1.) The fidelity of others should be a quickening motive to excite our diligence; and their dying testimony to the blessedness of Christ's ways, should comfort and encourage us to persevere in them. (2.) When we have the sure hope of the crown of righteousness, the day of our departure will be the brightest which ever dawned upon us. (3.) They who are faithful unto death may with delight look back; and whilst they ascribe all to their Master's grace, they cannot but rejoice in the evidence which the review affords of their approved sincerity before him. (4.) Whatever difficulties are in our way, we have a good cause to bear us out, and should comfortably and courageously persevere; whatever we lose for Christ here, we shall, at least in eternity, be unspeakable gainers by him. (5.) There is an awful day at hand, and a righteous judge expected. Blessed and happy are they who truly love the day of his appearing, and can say with confidence, and real desire, Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly.

9. [p] Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me: 10. For [q] Demas [r] hath forsaken me, having loved this present world, and is departed into Thessalonica; Crescens to Galatia, [s] Titus unto Dalmatia. 11. Only [t] Luke is with me. Take Mark, and bring him with thee: for he is profitable to me for the ministry. 12. And [u] Tychicus have I sent to Ephesus. 13. The cloak that I left at Troas with Carpus, when thou comest, bring with thee, and the books, but especially * the parchments. 14. [x] Alexander the coppersmith did me much evil: the Lord [y] reward him according to his works: 15. [z] Of whom be thou ware also; for he hath greatly withstood † our words.

Verses 9—15. Several directions are given to Timothy:

1. Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me, as I especially need thy company at this time. For Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world, and now, in this trying season, hath shamefully deserted me, pursuing his own base and worldly interests, and is departed into Thessalonica, to be out of the danger to which here he might, as my companion, have been exposed: Crescens is gone, on affairs of the church, to Galatia, and Titus to Dalmatia: so that I am almost left alone. Only Luke is with me, my true and faithful fellow-labourer, and Tychicus have I sent to Ephesus. Note, The love of this present world hath fatally warped many from their fidelity to Christ.

2. Take Mark and bring him with thee, for he is profitable to me for the ministry. Whatever just cause of displeasure the apostle might have had formerly against him, he was now returned to his duty, and therewith to Paul's favour and regard. Note, Those who have never so much offended us, we should cordially again receive, whenever they humbly desire to return to the right way.

3. The cloak, or, as others render it, the desk, that I left at Troas, with Carpus, my host, when thou comest, bring with thee, and the books, but especially the parchments. What these writings contained, of which the apostle was so careful, is uncertain; some have thought it was the roll of his freedom, others, the copies of his epistles, which had been sent to the several churches.

4. He admonishes him to beware of a bitter enemy to Christianity. Alexander the coppersmith did me much evil, (Acts xix. 33.) and still bears an implacable enmity to me. The Lord reward him according to his works, to whose righteous judgment I leave him. Of whom be thou ware also: for he hath greatly withstood our words, and endeavoured to prejudice both Jews and Gentiles against that gospel which we preach. Note, Though no private revenge must dictate a thought or wish of resentment, yet obstinate and incorrigible enemies to truth and godliness are to be delivered up to an avenging God.

16. At my first answer [a] no man stood with me, but all men forsook me: [b] I pray God that it may not be laid to their charge. 17. [c] Notwithstanding, the Lord stood with me, and strengthened me; [d] that by me the preaching might be fully known, and that all the Gentiles might hear: and [e] I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion. 18. [f] And the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work, and [g] will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom: [h] to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen. 19. Salute [i] Prisca and Aquila, and [k] the household of Onesiphorus. 20. [l] Erastus abode at Corinth: but [m] Trophimus have I left at Miletum sick. 21. [n] Do thy diligence to come before winter. Verses 16—22. The apostle here,

1. Informs Timothy of his present circumstances. At my first answer, when I was called to defend myself before the emperor, no man stood with me, but all, who could be of any service by their countenance or presence, forsook me, through fear and cowardice: I pray God that it may not be laid to their charge, but that he would pardon this unfaithfulness, and bring them to repentance. Notwithstanding, though deserted by men, the Lord stood with me, and strengthened me with boldness, freedom, and fidelity to plead the cause of his gospel; that by me the preaching might be fully known, and that all the Gentiles might hear, who were present at my trial, or to whom the substance of it should be related: and I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion, from the cruel Nero, and the jaws of death, which seemed to yawn for me. And I am fully confident, from long experience, that the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work, that I shall never speak nor act unbecoming the character I bear, intimidated by any fear of sufferings; and will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom, giving me the inheritance in glory which he hath provided and promised: to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen! Note, (1.) In trying times we are not to be surprised if many desert us who promised very fair. (2.) If the Lord stand by us, we want no other support. (3.) It is our comfort, whatever befalls us, that we have a heavenly kingdom secured, and then come life, come death, all must be well.

2. He sends his own and others' salutations, and hastens Timothy to come to him. Salute Prisca and Aquila, and the household of Onesiphorus. Erastus, the chamberlain, abode at Corinth: but Trophimus have I left at Miletum sick, not having any suggestion from the Lord, or power, miraculously to restore him. Do thy diligence to come before winter. Eubulus greeteth thee, and Pudens, and Linus, and Claudia, and all the brethren in these parts.

3. He concludes with his hearty benediction and prayer for him. The Lord Jesus Christ be with thy spirit, to quicken, teach, guide, and preserve thee. Grace be with you, and all that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. Amen.

A PRACTICAL COMMENT

UPON THE

EPISTLE OF ST PAUL

TO TITUS.

Introduction.

THIS Epistle of Paul to Titus is much of the same nature with those to Timothy; both were converts of Paul, and his companions in labours and sufferings, both in the office of evangelists, whose work was to water the churches planted by the apostles, and to set in order the things that were wanting in them. We read much of this Titus, his titles and character, and active usefulness in many places: He was a Greek, Gal. ii. 3. St Paul called him his son, Tit. i. 4. his brother, 2 Cor. ii. 13. his partner and fellow-helper, 2 Cor. viii. 23. one that walked in the same Spirit, and in the same steps with himself. He went up with the apostle to the church at Jerusalem, Gal. ii. 1. was much conversant at Corinth, for which church he had an earnest care, 2 Cor. viii. 16. Paul's second epistle to them, and probably his first also, was sent by his hand, 2 Cor. viii. 16, 17, 18, 23. and chap. ix. 2, 3, 4. and chap. xii. 18. He was with the apostle at Rome, and thence went into Dalmatia, 2 Tim. iv. 10. after which no more occurs of him in the scriptures. In Crete, a large island at the mouth of the Ægean sea, the gospel had got some footing; and here were Paul and Titus in one of their travels cultivating this plantation; but the apostle of the Gentiles, having on him the care of all the churches, could not himself tarry long at this place: he therefore left Titus some time there to carry on the work which had been begun; wherein, probably meeting with more difficulty than ordinary, Paul wrote this epistle to him. He was to see all the cities furnished with good pastors; to reject and keep out the unmeet and unworthy; to teach sound doctrine, and instruct all sorts in their duties; to set forth the free grace of God in man's salvation by Christ; and withal to show the necessity of maintaining good works by those who have believed in God, and hope for eternal life from him.

CHAP. I.—ANNO DOMINI, 65.

In this chapter we have, (1.) The preface or introduction to the epistle, ver. 1—4. (2.) The end of Titus' being left at Crete, ver. 5. And, (3.) How the same should be pursued in reference both to good and bad ministers, from ver. 6, to the end.

Verses 1—4. The apostle opens with his usual address.

1. He sets forth his own divine commission and apostleship. This epistle comes from Paul, who counts it his highest honour to be called a servant of God in the gospel of his dear Son, and an apostle of Jesus Christ, sent to bear the glad tidings of his salvation to Gentile lands, according to the faith of God's elect, the doctrine which is to be embraced by all whom the Lord hath chosen, and is pleased effectually to call to the knowledge of the truth which is after godliness, and which, having heartily embraced myself, I now with delight publish to others: in hope of eternal life, which all who live godly in Christ Jesus are sure to attain unto, because God, who cannot lie, hath promised it unto them, in Christ their head, before the world began; but hath in due times manifested his word through preaching, which is committed unto me, according to the commandment of God our Saviour; and I have with all fidelity laboured to discharge the important trust. Note, (1.) The highest dignity is to be the servant of the living God. (2.) There is an elect of God, to whom the gospel will be infallibly effectual. (3.) All who are chosen in Christ Jesus before the world began, are in the fulness of time brought to confess the faith, acknowledge the truth, and in all godliness to show its influence upon their hearts. (4.) Eternal life is as sure to all the faithful as the promise of an unchangeable God can make it; he must be false to his word before they can fail of their inheritance in glory. (5.) They who are ministers of God, must be indefatigable in preaching. Dumb dogs that cannot, or will not bark, are not of the Great Shepherd's appointment. 2. He wishes Titus the best of blessings. To Titus, mine own son after the common faith, my spiritual child, begotten in the gospel, be grace, mercy, and peace, from God the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ our Saviour. Note, (1.) All believers have one common faith, and are united to the same Jesus. (2.) If Christ be indeed our Saviour, then God's sovereign and everlasting love and mercy, in all their boundless import of pardon and salvation to the uttermost, and peace of conscience, present and eternal, will be our blessed portion.

5. For this cause left I thee in [n] Crete, [o] that thou shouldest set in order the things that are † wanting, and ordain elders in every city, as I had appointed [p] thee: 6. [p] If any be blameless, the husband of one wife, having faithful children, not accused of riot, or unruly. 7. For [q] a bishop must be blameless, as the steward of God; [r] not self-willed, not soon angry, not given to wine, no striker, not given to filthy lucre; 8. But [s] a lover of hospitality, a lover of ‡ good men, sober, just, holy, temperate; 9. [t] Holding fast the faithful word, ‖ as he hath been taught, that he may be able by sound doctrine both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers. 10. [u] For there are many unruly and vain talkers and deceivers, specially they of the circumcision: 11. Verses 5—11. St Paul,

1. Reminds him of the end for which he was left in Crete. For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldest set in order the things that are wanting, directing them concerning the proper discipline, worship, and conduct, to be observed by this lately converted church; and ordain elders in every city, as I have appointed thee, such as shall be found duly qualified for the ministerial work.

2. He describes the character of those whom he should ordain. If any be blameless, having a good report of those who know him best: the husband of one wife, no polygamist: having faithful children, brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord; not accused of riot, or unruly, dissolute and refractory, but kept under due restraint; neither a disgrace to themselves or their parents. For a bishop must be blameless, as the steward of God, appointed to that high charge in his holy family, and therefore of a character irreproachable; not self-willed, of a rash and obstinate temper; not soon angry, and firing at every provocation; not given to wine, addicted to drunkenness, or fond of the glass; no striker, violent in his passions; not given to filthy lucre, a mercenary wretch, who serves for hire; but out of zeal for Christ and the souls of men. He must be also a lover of hospitality, entertaining poor strangers, and Christians driven from their homes by the fury of persecution: a lover of good men, without prejudice or exception; sober, grave and prudent in his carriage and deportment; just and upright in his conversation; holy in all his conduct; temperate in his desires and appetites; holding fast the faithful word, maintaining the purity of the gospel, and dispensing it with all fidelity, as he hath been taught by us; that he may be able, by sound doctrine, both to exhort and comfort the true members of Christ's church, and to convince gainsayers of their errors. For such spiritual wisdom is necessary, because there are many unruly and vain talkers and deceivers in Crete as well as other churches, who though professing Christianity, walk disorderly, and with their heretical tenents draw away disciples after them; especially they of the circumcision, who are the great corrupters of the faith, urging circumcision and the observance of the Mosaical institutions as necessary to salvation; whose mouths must be stopped, not by force, but by sound truth and scriptural arguments to detect their fallacies and silence their cavils; who subvert whole houses, insinuating themselves into the families of professors, teaching things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake, adapting their teaching to the palates of their hearers, in order to insinuate into their confidence, and enrich themselves at their expense.

12. One of themselves, even a [a] prophet of their own, said, The Cretians are always liars, evil beasts, slow bellies. 13. This witness is true: wherefore [b] rebuke them sharply, that they may be [c] sound in the faith; 14. [d] Not giving heed to Jewish fables, and commandments of men, that turn from the truth. 15. [e] Unto the pure all things are pure: but unto them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure; but even their mind and conscience is defiled. 16. [f] They profess that they know God; but in works they deny him, being abominable, and disobedient, and unto every good work * reprobate.

* Or void of judgment.

Verses 12—16. The national character of the Cretians was very bad, therefore they would need sharp rebuke.

1. The apostle quotes one of their own writers. One of themselves, even a prophet, or poet, of their own, Epimenedes, said, the Cretians are always liars, peculiarly addicted to this sin; evil beasts, ravenous, gluttonous, and insatiate in their appetites; slow bellies, luxurious and indolent: and this witness is true, it is their just character. Wherefore,

2. Rebuke them sharply; such scandalous deeds required severe and cutting remonstrances, that their sin and danger being set before them, they may be sound in the faith, warned by these rebukes of others to be more watchful, or recovered from such grievous backsliding: not giving heed to Jewish fables, and commandments of men, the ridiculous legends and vain traditions of those Judaizing teachers, that turn from the truth, apostates themselves, and labouring to pervert the faith of others, and to adulterate the blessed gospel of grace, by enforcing upon the conscience the abrogated rites of the Mosaical law. Unto the pure all things are pure, and no ceremonial uncleanness contracted by the touch or taste of things forbidden by the Levitical institutions; but unto them that are defiled, by the reigning impurity of their hearts and lives, and unbelieving, destitute of faith in Jesus, there is nothing pure, all they do and say is abominable in the sight of God; but even their mind and conscience is defiled, and, when the fountain is thus polluted, every stream which flows from it must needs be foul. They profess indeed to know God, and make great boasts of their wisdom; but in works they deny him, and act as infidels, being abominable, in their spirit and conduct, disobedient to all God's holy laws, as well as enemies to his gospel, and, in short, to every good work reprobate, unfit and unable for, as well as disinclined to, the practice of them. Note, (1.) Stubborn sinners call for severe rebuke. Lenity, where the knife is required, is really cruelty to the patient. (2.) The best preservative against the wiles of deceivers is being sound in the faith. They who are sure grounded on Christ will not easily be shaken. (3.) They who are destitute of right principles must necessarily err in all their conduct: every thing they do, even what is in itself right, as to the matter and deed itself, becomes sin to them, because it proceeds from wrong principles, and is directed to wrong ends. (4.) It is not sounding professions, but holy lives which characterise real Christians. Non magna loquimur, sed vivimus.

Verses 1—6. the apostle proceeds to direct Titus in the faithful discharge of his office. But, in contradiction to these deceivers, speak thou the things which become sound doctrine, the wholesome truths of God's life-giving word, dividing it aright to every man, according to their age, station, and circumstances.

1. That the aged men, as their years as well as profession especially demand from them, be sober, or vigilant, circumspect in their conduct: grave, in habit, manners, conversation, that they may engage the reverence of their younger brethren; temperate and prudent, having their passions and appetites in subjection; sound in the faith, in doctrine and practice; in charity enlarged; in patience exemplary, bearing the provocations of others with meekness, and not fretful under their own infirmities. Such old disciples are noble ornaments to their Christian profession.

2. The aged women, likewise, that they be in behaviour as becometh holiness, in dress, conversation, and deportment; not false accusers, not slandering and defaming any, nor sowing discord among brethren; not given to much wine, drunkenness, or the love of liquor, being in women doubly odious and hateful; teachers of good things, by their example and discourse inculcating on their daughters every thing which may adorn the Christian name.

3. What the aged must teach, the younger women should learn of them, to be sober, avoiding every appearance of wantonness, excess, or levity; to love their husbands, cleaving to them in warm affection; to love their children, training them up from infancy in the nurture and admonition of the Lord; to be discreet in the management of their families; chaste, showing the most unfeigned modesty and purity of manners; keepers at home, not gadding about to the neglect of their domestic affairs, but ever best pleased to be in their own house; good, kind and gentle to their servants, and, like Dorcas, full of alms-deeds and good works; obedient to their own husbands, delighting to serve and please them in all things, that the word of God be not blasphemed by a contrary behaviour, which would give the adversaries of Christianity occasion to speak reproachfully. Note, Nothing makes Christianity appear so amiable as the conscientious discharge of the relative duties which it enjoins.

4. Young men likewise exhort to be sober-minded, serious, solid, tractable, having a due sense of their own inexperience, and willing to be ruled and advised by their elder and wiser friends.

Verses 7, 8. We have a particular direction for Titus himself, who, as a young man, should be the example of what he taught to his brethren. In all things shewing thyself a pattern of good works; practising what he preached: in doctrine shewing uncorruptness, declaring the pure unadulterated truth, and maintaining a single eye to God's glory and the benefit of immortal souls; gravity, with all seriousness delivering his message, and with all sincerity; using sound speech that cannot be condemned, inculcating scripture truths in scripture language, and with such plainness and simplicity as that he that is of the contrary part, and would be glad to carp at and censure any ambiguous expression, may be ashamed of his malicious design, having no evil thing to say of you, finding no just charge of error in doctrine, or immorality in practice, to allege against you. Note, (1.) They who preach to others must by their practice prove that they believe themselves, else how can it be thought that others should credit them? (2.) Many watch for the halting of Christ's ministers; and the knowledge of this should make them more watchful over all that they speak or do, that confusion may cover their malignant enemies.

Verses 9, 10. The duty of servants, is here prescribed. Exhort servants to be obedient unto their own masters, with inward respect, as well as all outward dutiful submission; and to please them well in all things lawful to be done; not answering again, disputing their orders, murmuring at their commands, or daring to make an impertinent or saucy reply; not purloining the least thing from them, but, to a crumb of bread, strictly honest; nor conniving at the least waste or robbery committed by others; shewing all good fidelity, true to every trust reposed in them, speaking with the greatest veracity, and punctual in the observance of their orders; that they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things, and even in the eyes of their unbelieving masters, if under such, recommend the religion which they profess. Note, Such a servant as is here described is a great acquisition. Verses 11—15. The strongest motives are here suggested to enforce the practice before recommended.

1. This is one great end of our redemption. For the grace of God displayed in the gospel word, that bringeth salvation, declaring the sovereign and free mercy of God in Christ to miserable sinners, hath appeared in the most illustrious manner to all men, to men of all ranks, degrees, and nations; teaching us, that, denying ungodliness of every kind, and worldly lusts, whether of the flesh, of the eye, or the pride of life, (1 John ii. 6.) we should live soberly, in the government and subdual of every inordinate appetite and passion; righteously, with unimpeached integrity and uprightness in our dealings towards men; and godly, in all acts of public and private devotion, in the use of every holy ordinance, and with a constant regard to the divine glory, in this present world, full as it is of evil and temptation. Note, (1.) Our salvation is purely a matter of grace, flowing from God's boundless and sovereign love, without respect to our deserts or desires. (2.) The gospel is a revelation of mercy to all ranks and degrees; and God appears eminently glorious there, in justifying the chief of sinners who believe in Jesus. (3.) Whenever we are truly partakers of grace, the blessed influence thereof will appear on our hearts and lives, effectually engaging us to renounce every known sin, and powerfully quickening us for the discharge of every duty towards God, our neighbour, or ourselves. The doctrines of grace are the only principles which can produce righteousness and true holiness.

2. We expect the appearing of the great Judge, and therefore are peculiarly called upon to prepare to meet him. Looking for that blessed hope, the great object of it, the Lord from heaven; and the glorious appearing of the great God, and, or even, our Saviour Jesus Christ, who shall shortly sit upon the throne of his glory, when all nations shall be gathered before him, to receive from his lips the irreversible sentence, and in whose favour we have an assured interest; who gave himself for us an offering and a sacrifice to God, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, both from the guilt and power of it; and might purify to himself a peculiar people, the objects of his sovereign choice, taken from the corrupted mass of mankind to be to the praise of his glory, and zealous of good works, influenced by the divine principle of faith which worketh by love, aiming at the advancement of their Redeemer's honour, and yielding themselves up to be guided by his word and will. Note, (1.) Every believer hath a blessed hope before him, under the influence of which he lives comfortably, and supported by which he dies happily. (2.) They who would meet the great God their Saviour in peace, must be found among his redeemed, and experience a present deliverance from the reigning power of iniquity. (3.) Christ's people are indeed peculiar in their manners, temper, and conduct, distinguished from the world in which they dwell by the purity of their lives, and their zeal for good works.

3. The apostle enjoins Titus to urge these things upon the consciences of his hearers. These things speak with all freedom, and exhort them diligently to observe; and rebuke with all authority those who dare oppose the truth, and would maintain their erroneous principles and practices. Let no man despise thee; behave in such a manner as may command respect: and if any notwithstanding presume to treat thee or thy ministry with contempt, it shall be at their peril.

Verses 1—7. The apostle proceeds,

1. To direct Titus respecting the obedience which he must inculcate as due to the civil magistrate. Put them in mind to be subject to principalities and powers, under whatever government they live; to obey magistrates with loyalty and willing submission; to be ready to every good work, rendering to all degrees of men the duty owing to them: to speak evil of, or blaspheme no man, reviling the magistrates, or raising any slanderous report; to be no brawlers, disturbing the peace of society, turbulent and quarrelsome; but gentle in temper and manners, shewing all meekness to all men, however perverse or provoking their conduct may be towards us.

2. He suggests the most cogent reasons to enforce his exhortation.

(1.) The consideration of their former sinful state; and the more deeply we are sensible of our own vileness, the more we shall feel ourselves obliged to bear with others. For we ourselves also were sometimes foolish, as our opposers now are, ignorant of divine truth, and under the darkness of our fallen minds; disobedient in spirit and practice, refusing to hear and obey the dictates of God's word; deceived, and wandering out of the way, under the influence of a corrupted heart, and the wiles of Satan; serving divers lusts and pleasures, perfect slaves to our sensual appetites, the basest of all servitude; living in malice and envy, possessed and governed by these diabolical passions; regarding others, who were more prosperous in the world, with a malignant eye, and pleased with any miseries which befell them. Hateful to God, and all who bear his image, because of these abominations; and hating one another with implacable resentment. What a fearful description! yet in this glass may every enlightened sinner discover his own features, and own the humbling resemblance; for as face answereth face, so doth the heart of man to man.

(2.) The kindness and love of God to them in their miserable estate should engage them to show the like pity and compassion towards others. But after that, vile as we were, the kindness and love of God our Saviour, notwithstanding, towards man appeared, most illustriously displayed in his glorious gospel; not by works of righteousness which we have done, for all our works were the very reverse, and merited only wrath to the uttermost; but according to his mercy, in the most astonishing manner extended to the miserable and the desperate, he hath saved us, freely, sovereignly, and for ever, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost, who is the glorious agent of the divine change wrought in regeneration; cleansing our souls from the power of corruption, quickening us to a life of grace and holiness, maintaining and carrying it on day by day, till it is perfected in glory; which Holy Ghost he shed on us abundantly, both in his gifts and graces, through Jesus Christ our Saviour, the purchaser of every blessing for his redeemed people, and the dispenser of this Spirit unto them; that being justified by his grace, and through faith of the operation of God brought into a state of pardon and reconciliation, we should be made heirs of glory, according to the hope of eternal life, which he hath given us in that adored Redeemer, who hath obtained a complete salvation for us, not only from all the miseries of sin, but unto all the blessedness of eternity. Note, (1.) The salvation of the sinner is entirely of grace, from the beginning to the end: pardon, holiness, and hope of life eternal, are all the gift of God through Jesus Christ our Saviour. (2.) Though we are justified freely, not for any righteousness of our own, but of God's mere favour; yet do we from that moment become different men, and new creatures, by the Spirit of our God, renewed in our minds, and preparing for the glory which is prepared for us.

8. [o] This is a faithful saying, and these things I will that thou affirm constantly, [p] that they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works. These things are good and profitable unto men. 9. But [q] avoid foolish questions, and genealogies, and contentions, and strivings about the law; for they are unprofitable and vain. 10. Verses 8—11. The apostle here,

1. Inculcates the doctrine which Titus must preach. This is a faithful saying, all that I have above declared of the duties incumbent on believers, the misery from which they have been redeemed, and the amazing grace of which they have been made partakers, is to be steadfastly believed and embraced; and these things I will that thou constantly affirm; often insisting upon them in the course of thy ministry, to the end, that they which have believed in God, to the saving of their souls, might be careful to maintain good works; to excel, and lead the way to others

(προϊστασθαι) with all diligence and zeal improving every opportunity which offers to be useful. These things are good and profitable unto men; these doctrines here enforced have the most immediate tendency to advance the benefit of mankind, and promote their present and eternal good. Note, The doctrine of justification by grace is so far from destroying the obligation to good works, that it is the only real and effectual principle which can make us careful to maintain them.

2. He cautions him what to shun. But avoid foolish questions, and genealogies, and contentions, and strivings about the law, which the Judaizing teachers affect, to the great prejudice of Christianity: for they are unprofitable and vain; tending to no useful purpose, but sowing discord in the church, and corrupting the simplicity of the gospel.

3. A man that is a heretic, who openly professes and maintains doctrines subversive of the fundamental articles of faith, after the first and second admonition, reject; if he continues obstinate in his errors, remove him from your communion, and acknowledge him no longer as a brother: knowing that he that is such is subverted, apostate from Christ, the only foundation; and sinneth wilfully, being condemned of himself; openly broaching his sentiments, departing from the confession of faith which he formerly made, and avowedly separating himself from the church of God. Note, They who refuse to be reclaimed from their errors by repeated admonition, must be cut off from the body of the visible church by excommunication.

12. When I shall send Artemas unto thee, or [t] Tychicus, [u] be diligent to come unto me to Nicopolis; for I have determined there to winter. 13. Bring Zenas the lawyer and [x] Apollos on their journey diligently, that nothing be wanting unto them. 14. And let ours also learn to [y] maintain good works for necessary uses, [z] that they be not unfruitful. 15. [a] All that are with me salute thee. Greet them that love us in the faith. Grace be with you all. Amen.

Verses 12—15. We have here,

1. Some particular directions given to Titus. (1.) When I shall send Artemas unto thee, to supply thy absence, or Tychicus, be diligent to come unto me to Nicopolis: for I have determined there to winter. (2.) Bring Zenas the lawyer and Apollos on their journey diligently, that nothing be wanting unto them, but that they be supplied with every necessary for their travels, when they remove to preach the gospel in some other place. (3.) And let ours also learn to maintain good works for necessary uses, that they be not unfruitful, but adorn the profession which they make, diligent in their several employments, and liberal according to their ability in the maintenance of their ministers, or in assisting any of their brethren who may need their support.

2. He concludes with salutations and his apostolic benediction. All that are with me salute thee affectionately. Greet them that love us in the faith, and are one in sentiment and heart with us. Grace be with you all, in its most abundant fruits and richest manifestations, Amen! so prays your faithful friend, confident that God will hear and answer his petitions for you.

A PRACTICAL COMMENT

UPON THE

EPISTLE OF ST PAUL

TO PHILEMON.

Introduction.

THIS epistle to Philemon is placed the last of those with the name of Paul to them, perhaps because the shortest, and of an argument peculiar and different from all others, yet such as the Spirit of God, which indited it, saw would, in its kind, be very instructive and useful in the churches. The occasion of it was this: Philemon, one of note, and probably a minister in the church of Colosse, a city of Phrygia, had a servant named Onesimus, who, having purloined his goods, ran away from him, and in his rambles came to Rome, where Paul was then a prisoner for the gospel, and providentially coming under his preaching there, was, by the blessing of God, converted by him; after which he ministered a while to the apostle in bonds, and might have been further useful to him, but understanding him to be another man's servant, he would not, without his consent, detain him, but sends him back with this letter commendatory, wherein he earnestly sues for his pardon and kind reception.

ANNO DOMINI, 64.

In this epistle we have the preface, ver. 1—7. The substance and body of it, ver. 8—21. And then the conclusion, ver. 22 to the end.

1. [a] PAUL, a prisoner of Jesus Christ, and Timothy our brother, unto Philemon our dearly beloved, and fellow-labourer, 2. And to our beloved Apphia, and [b] Archippus our fellow-soldier, and to [c] the church in thy house: 3. [d] Grace to you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. 4. [e] I thank my God, making mention of thee always in my prayers; 5. [f] Hearing of thy love and faith, which thou hast toward the Lord Jesus, and toward all saints; 6. That [g] the communication of thy faith may become effectual, by the acknowledging of every good thing which is in you in Christ Jesus. 7. [h] For we have great joy and consolation in thy love, because the bowels of the saints are refreshed by thee, brother.

Verses 1—7. We have here the preface to this short but beautiful epistle, and may observe,

1. The persons from whom it comes: from Paul, a prisoner of Jesus Christ, now suffering for the gospel cause; and Timothy our brother: and where two such eminent servants of the Saviour concurred in a request, what could be denied them?

2. The persons to whom it is directed: unto Philemon our dearly beloved brother in Christ, and fellow-labourer in the gospel; and to our beloved Apphia, and Archippus our fellow-soldier, in the glorious warfare under Christ the Captain of our salvation; and to the church in thy house, his whole family being converts to the faith, or the faithful at Colosse assembled there for worship; and by thus saluting them he seems desirous to interest them on his behalf, and to solicit their concurrence in the request he was about to make.

3. The salutation. Grace to you, in all its comprehensive import; and peace, flowing from a sense of pardon, acceptance, and the assured inheritance of glory; and both proceeding from God the Father, from his eternal, sovereign, boundless love, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, by whom all spiritual blessings have been purchased, and through whom alone they are bestowed upon us.

4. His thankfulness and prayer. I thank my God, in a covenant of everlasting love, making mention of thee always in my prayers, whenever I approach a throne of grace; hearing of thy love and faith which thou hast toward the Lord Jesus, and toward all saints; for which I offer my unceasing praises, and add my fervent prayers, that the communication of thy faith may become effectual, to engage thee to every farther instance of generosity and benevolence, by the acknowledging of every good thing which is in you, in, or towards Christ Jesus, to whom much glory will redound, and many thanks be offered by those who feel the benefit of those gracious dispositions which the Saviour hath implanted, and which manifest themselves in every work of labour and love towards his people for his sake: for we have great joy and consolation in hearing of thy distinguished love, because the bowels of the saints are refreshed by thee, brother, who gratefully acknowledge thy extensive charity; and this emboldens me to hope, that in the present instance my petition will be successful.

8. Wherefore, though I might be much [i] bold in Christ to enjoin thee that which is convenient, 9. Yet for love's sake I rather beseech thee, being such [k] an one as Paul the aged, and now also a [l] prisoner of Jesus Christ. 10. I beseech thee for my son [m] Onesimus, whom I have begotten in my bonds: 11. Which in time past was to thee [n] unprofitable, but now profitable to thee and to me: 12. Whom I have sent again: thou therefore [o] receive him that is mine own bowels. 13. Whom I would have retained with me, that [p] in thy stead he might have ministered unto me in the bonds of the gospel: 14. But without thy mind would I do nothing; that thy benefit should [q] not be as it were of necessity, but willingly.

Verses 8—14. The apostle comes to the main business of the epistle, to entreat for poor Onesimus; and he insinuates a multitude of the most powerful arguments, which should engage Philemon to grant his request, and be reconciled to his fugitive servant.

1. He might have used his apostolic authority, but he prefers the entreaty of love. Wherefore, though I might be much bold in Christ, to enjoin thee that which is convenient, and it would have been your duty in the present case implicitly to obey; yet for love's sake I rather beseech thee, waving all superiority, and pleading that love which Jesus hath shown to you, and I feel towards you, being such a one as Paul the aged, grown old in the service of our common Lord, and now also a prisoner of Jesus Christ; therefore I cannot but be assured, whatever would be a comfort to me in these declining years, and serve to make my chain lighter, Philemon, for his Master's sake and mine, will not fail to grant. Inimitable is the manner in which the apostle introduces the point which he had in view. Having raised every tender sentiment of love and friendship in his bosom, he

2. Beautifully introduces in the most endearing light the subject of his request. I beseech thee for my son, one that now stands in that near relation to me,—and startle not at the name,—strange as it may appear,—the person is no other than Onesimus, whom I have begotten in my bonds. So mysterious are the ways of providence, that, though a fugitive from thee, divine grace has led him to my prison, there to become a partaker of the blessings of the gospel.

3. He suggests the happy change now wrought upon him, who in time past was to thee unprofitable; with penitent shame he hath acknowledged his former ill behaviour, over which I would cast a veil of oblivion; but now can speak of him as a different man, whose spirit and actions I am confident will correspond with his name, and he will be found profitable to thee, if received again into thy service; and, as I have proved by some experience, would have been most useful to me. Note, (1.) When we speak of the faults of penitents, it should be with tenderness, not severity. (2.) Wherever divine grace comes, it makes a blessed alteration. (3.) A Christian servant is a truly profitable member in every family.

4. His own love to this signal convert should engage Philemon's to him. Whom I have sent again back to thy service, thou therefore receive him, that is mine own bowels; most tenderly beloved, and for whom I plead with all the affection that I should feel for my own child.

5. He had deprived himself of the very useful service which Onesimus would have afforded him, that he might restore him to his rightful master; referring it to Philemon whether he would send him back again to Rome or not. Whom I would have retained with me, that in thy stead he might have ministered unto me in the bonds of the gospel, and done me those kind offices which I know thou wouldst have been happy to have afforded me thyself. But without thy mind would I do nothing, nor detain him longer here; that, if it shall please thee to do me the favour of sending him hither again to minister unto me, thy benefit should not appear to be as it were of necessity, but willingly, as a voluntary act of generosity and friendship.

15. For [r] perhaps he therefore departed for a season, that thou shouldest receive him for ever; 16. Not now as a servant, but above a servant, [s] a brother beloved, specially to me, but how much more unto thee, both in the flesh, and in the Lord? 17. If thou count me therefore [t] a partner, receive him as myself. 18. If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee ought, put that on mine account: 19. I Paul have written it with mine own hand, I will repay it: albeit I do not say to thee [u] how thou owest unto me even thine own self besides. 20. Yea, brother, [x] let me have joy of thee in the Lord: refresh my bowels in the Lord. 21. [y] Having confidence in thy obedience, I wrote unto thee, knowing that thou wilt also do more than I say.

y 2 Cor. 7. 6.

Verses 15—21. The apostle proceeds to suggest other arguments, to engage Philemon kindly to receive this fugitive.

1. The mercy God had showed him. For perhaps he therefore departed for a season; so tenderly does the apostle mention his fault in flying his master's service, since it was now so wonderfully, by God's good providence, overruled for good: that thou shouldest receive him for ever, as a servant for life, to dwell together for eternity: yet not now as a common servant, or slave, but above a servant, even as a brother in the gospel, beloved and dear; especially to me, who have been the happy instrument of his conversion: but how much more to thee, both in the flesh, as a member of thy family, become most faithful and industrious; and in the Lord, as equally a partaker in all the blessings of the Redeemer's grace and love. Note, (1.) God sometimes amazingly overrules our most perverse ways, to bring out of them the greatest good. Onesimus, under all the blessings of Philemon's ministry, and sharing all the ordinances of his holy family, continued abandoned, turns thief and runagate, and flies to Rome; there the Lord finds him, and makes him a monument of mercy. (2.) Though Christianity maintains in the strictest manner all due subordination of stations, yet really Christian servants will have especial respect and regard shown them by their masters, who, as members of the same body, esteem them as their beloved brethren.

2. The communion which subsisted between them, as fellow-heirs of the same kingdom. If thou count me therefore a partner, a partaker of the same grace, and an inheritor of the same glory with thee, receive him as myself, with a hearty affection and sincere reconciliation.

3. He becomes Onesimus' surety for any wrong Philemon had sustained. If, as I have reason to apprehend, he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee ought, put that on mine account. I Paul have written it with mine own hand, I will repay it, and engage hereby to make you full satisfaction if demanded. Albeit I do not say to thee how deeply thou art indebted to me, as the instrument under God, and that thou owest unto me what is infinitely more valuable than all the wealth of the world, even thine own soul also.

4. This instance of his condescension to his request would give the apostle singular satisfaction, as a fresh proof of Philemon's fidelity. Yea, brother, let me have joy of thee in the Lord: on thy own account, as well as for the sake of Onesimus, I ask it, that I may have rejoicing over thee, as a living member of Jesus. Refresh my bowels in the Lord, and give me this consolation in my bonds, for that Redeemer's sake in whose name I urge my request. Note, (1.) Christians are brethren, and, as such, should delight to serve each other. (2.) It is highly the people's duty to endeavour to comfort their ministers, and to do every thing which may give them joy, and encourage them under their labours and sufferings for the gospel's sake.

5. He concludes with expressing his confidence in Philemon, which laid the strongest obligations upon him not to disappoint his expectations. Having confidence in thy obedience to our Lord's command to forgive every injury, I wrote unto thee, knowing that thou wilt also do more than I say, and show greater kindness to poor Onesimus than I have requested, exceeding even my desire.

22. But withal prepare me also a lodging: for [z] I trust that through your prayers I shall be given unto you. 23. There salute thee [a] Epaphras, my fellow-prisoner in Christ Jesus; 24. [b] Marcus, Aristarchus, Demas, Lucas, my fellow-labourers. 25. [c] The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit. Amen.

Verses 22—25. Having finished his main business, he closes,

1. With the intimation of a visit shortly. But withal prepare me also a lodging; for I trust that through your prayers I shall be delivered from my present confinement, and be given unto you, as a fresh act of favour from God, who for your further edification will enable me once more to minister his blessed gospel among you. Note, (1.) Prayer is the effectual means to procure all mercies for ourselves, and for each other. (2.) To have God's ministers spared to labour yet longer among us, is a signal favour.

2. He sends the salutations of many who desired to be kindly remembered to him. There salute thee Epaphras, my fellow-prisoner in Christ Jesus, sharing my honourable bonds for the same glorious cause; Marcus, Aristarchus, Demas, Lucas, my fellow-labourers.

3. He concludes with his usual benediction. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, in all its happy fruits, and eternally permanent effects, be with your spirit, with thee, and with all that are near and dear to thee, to bless, preserve, and keep you for his everlasting kingdom. Amen.

A PRACTICAL COMMENT UPON THE

EPISTLE TO THE

HEBREWS.

Introduction.

THIS epistle, though without a name, is generally ascribed to the apostle Paul: In the primitive times it was ascribed to him, and the style and scope of it very well agrees with his spirit, whose main end and endeavour was to exalt Christ. And some think that the apostle Peter refers to this epistle, and proves Paul to be the penman of it, by telling the Hebrews, to whom he wrote, of Paul's having written to them, 2 Pet. iii. 15. And we read of no other epistle that he ever wrote to them but this. And though it has been objected, that since Paul put his name to all his other epistles, he would not have omitted it here; yet others have well answered, that he being the apostle of the Gentiles, who were odious to the Jews, might think fit to conceal his name, lest their prejudices against him might hinder them from reading and weighing it as they ought to do. As to the scope and design of this epistle, it is very evident it was clearly to inform the minds and strongly to confirm the judgment of the Hebrews in the transcendent excellency of the gospel above the law, and so to take them off from the ceremonies of the law, to which they were so wedded, of which they were so fond, that they even doted on them. And those of them that were Christians retained too much of the old leaven, and wanted to be purged from it; he wanted therefore to persuade and press the believing Hebrews to a constant adherence to the Christian faith, and perseverance in it, notwithstanding all the sufferings they might meet with in so doing. In order to this, he speaks much of the excellency of the author of the gospel, the glorious Jesus, whose honour he advances, and whom he justly prefers before all others, showing him to be all in all, and this in lofty strains of holy rhetoric. It must be acknowledged there are many things in this epistle hard to be understood: but the sweetness we shall find therein, will make us abundant amends for all the pains we take to understand it. And, indeed, if we compare all the epistles of the New Testament, we shall not find any of them more replenished with divine, heavenly matter, than this to the Hebrews.

CHAP. I.—ANNO DOMINI, 64.

In this chapter we have a twofold comparison stated. (1.) Between the evangelical and legal dispensations, and the excellency of the gospel above that of the law is asserted and proved, ver. 1—3. (2.) Between the glory of Christ and that of the highest creatures, the angels, where the pre-eminence is given to the Lord Jesus Christ, and clearly demonstrated to belong unto him, from ver. 4, to the end of the chapter.

1. GOD, who [a] at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, 2. [b] Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, [c] whom he hath appointed heir of all things, [d] by whom also he made the worlds; 3. Who, being [e] the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and [f] upholding all things by the word of his power, [g] when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high; 4. Being made [h] so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they. 5. For unto which of the angels said he at any time, [i] Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? And again, [k] I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son? 6. And again, when he bringeth in the [l] first begotten into the world, he saith, [m] And let all the angels of God worship him. 7. And of the angels he saith, [n] Who maketh his angels spirits, and his ministers a flame of fire. 8. But unto the Son he saith, [o] Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever; a sceptre of * righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom. 9. [p] Thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity; therefore God, even [q] thy God, [r] hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows. 10. And, [s] Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth: and the heavens are the works of thine hands. 11.

Verses 1—14. The excellence of the gospel dispensation above the Mosaical opens this beautiful epistle. The apostle shows,

1. The different way in which God communicated his will to the church of old, and to his people at present. God who at sundry times, by degrees, with increasing clearness, and in divers manners, by types, visions, dreams, audible voices, and immediate inspiration, spoke in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days, at the close of the Jewish economy, and in that dispensation of grace which is the last which will be ever vouchsafed to the sons of men, and under this title of the last days hath been foretold by the inspired penmen, God hath, I say, now spoken unto us by his Son, the most glorious messenger who was ever yet employed in communicating the revelation of his will to men: in nature one with the Father, in majesty co-eternal.

2. He enlarges on the surpassing excellence of this Son of God, who had appeared in the human nature. (1.) It is He whom he hath appointed heir of all things, as Mediator exalting him to the sovereign and universal dominion over the works of his hands, and especially giving him to be head over all things to his church, in and through whom every member of it can only be entitled to the eternal inheritance. (2.) By whom also he made the worlds, exerting his co-agency and co-operation with the Father, not as an instrument, but as the great Creator. (3.) Who being the brightness of his glory, Light of Light, and very God of very God, possessing the essential attributes of Deity; and the express image of his person, bearing his exact resemblance to every divine perfection, appears his visible representative. And, (4.) As he is the Creator, so he continues upholding all things by the word of his power, supporting and governing them by his providence. (5.) When he had by himself purged our sins, Himself, the great High-priest and Sacrifice, expiating the transgressions of his people, which the blood of bulls and goats, shed by the Levitical priests, could never take away, and by one oblation of himself, once offered, obtaining eternal redemption for us. (6.) When he had thus made the all-atoning sacrifice on the cross, he sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on high, in virtue of his own blood entering into the holy place not made with hands, and, as a priest upon the throne, (Zech. vi. 13.) he is exalted to the highest dignity and glory in the human nature. (7.) He hath the pre-eminence not only above the greatest prophets, but over the highest of the heavenly hosts; being made so much better than the angels; in his character as Mediator, as well as in the transcendent excellence of his divine nature, he infinitely surpasses the most glorious of all created beings, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they, even the name of Son of God, in a sense peculiar to himself, and which appears evident from the transcendent exaltation which in virtue of his sufferings he had now by right obtained.

3. In support of his argument, to prove the infinite pre-eminence of the incarnate Son above the highest of the angelic hosts, he brings the strongest proofs from those scriptures which the Jews admitted as of divine authority. For unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my Son, the same in essential Deity; this day have I begotten thee, even from eternity, which to God is one permanent unsuccessive day; or this refers to his resurrection from the dead, whereby his eternal Sonship was manifested, (Rom. i. 4.) And again, I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son, treated with peculiar and distinguishing love, and raised to the eternal throne of glory. And again, when he bringeth in the First begotten, the appointed heir of all things, into the world, at his miraculous conception, he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him, and pay him that divine honour which is due to their Creator alone, and is the unalienable right of Deity. And of the angels he saith, Who maketh his angels spirits and his ministers a flame of fire; their highest honour and dignity is to be the servants of the great Jehovah, and as flames of fire, with such activity and powerful agency, to execute his will and pleasure. But unto the Son, as their eternal king, he saith, Thy throne, O God, who art the essential Jehovah, is for ever and ever, from everlasting unchangeably the same, and to eternity must endure: a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom. Thou hast the most indisputed title to reign; thy bosom is the seat of justice, and thy administration is marked with unsullied truth, holiness, and equity. Thou hast loved righteousness, fulfilling it in thy own person, and approving it in thy people, and hated iniquity, about to punish it with everlasting perdition. Therefore God, even thy God, thy covenant God, as the incarnate Mediator, hath anointed thee to the office of prophet, priest, and king, with the oil of gladness, with the most unmeasurable fulness of spiritual gifts and graces, above thy fellows, whether angels or saints, kings, priests, or prophets. And thou, Lord, in the beginning, before any creature yet had a being, by thy omnipotent creative power, hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thine hands; all the creatures, spiritual or corporeal, animate or inanimate, from the highest to the lowest, own thee their great Creator. They shall perish, this visible creation of heaven and earth shall decay; but thou remainest, unchangeable, immortal; and they all shall wax old as doth a garment, the creatures of this lower world are mouldering daily, and nature's dissolution is at hand; and as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed; but thou art the same, immutably, eternally, and thy years shall not fail, the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. But to which of the angels said he at any time, as he did to his incarnate Son, Sit thou on my right hand, enthroned in supreme majesty, until I make thine enemies thy footstool, and raise thee triumphant over every foe, when sin, Satan, death, and hell, shall be for ever put under thy feet? Such language belongs not to the highest of the angelic host: for are they not all ministering spirits, servants to the great Mediator, and sent forth, under his command, to minister for them, in every kind office, who shall be heirs of salvation, appointed to the eternal inheritance in virtue of their relation to their exalted Head? From the whole we may observe, 1. The transcendent glory of the Lord Jesus: (1.) In his divine nature. (2.) In his mediatorial capacity. The great Creator—the self-existent Jehovah—the eternal, immutable God—the object of adoration to the highest beings, angels as well as men—and reigning and to reign for ever and ever. 2. The honour and office of the angelic hosts; to adore their King, to obey his mandates with delight and vigour, and to serve those highly distinguished sons of men who are appointed to be heirs of salvation. 3. The dignity of God's children, standing in this high and holy relation to him, as adopted by his grace and designed for the enjoyment of his glory, attended by ministers of flame, and shortly to be conducted by them to their eternal home. 4. Vast and amazing as this visible creation now appears, the day approaches when, like the baseless fabric of a vision, all shall be dissolved, and by almighty power shall arise a new heaven and earth, to be the blessed abode of the redeemed. 5. Jesus must reign on his mediatorial throne till all his enemies are finally subdued, and his triumphant people shall come to reign with him in glory everlasting.

CHAP. II.—ANNO DOMINI, 64.

In this chapter the apostle, 1. Makes some application of the doctrine laid down in the foregoing, concerning the excellency of the person of Christ, both by way of exhortation and argument, ver. 1—4. 2. Enlarges further upon the pre-eminence of Christ above the angels, ver. 5—7. 3. He proceeds to remove the scandal of the cross, ver. 10—15. 4. To assert the incarnation of Christ, taking upon him not the nature of angels, but the seed of Abraham, and assigns the reason of his so doing, ver. 16. to the end.

1. THEREFORE [a] we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should * let them slip. 2. For, if the word spoken [b] by angels was stedfast, and every transgression and disobedience [c] received a just recompence of reward; 3. [d] How shall we escape, if we neglect [e] so great salvation; which at the first [f] began to be spoken by the Lord, and was [g] confirmed unto us by them that heard him; 4. [h] God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and †gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will?

Verses 1—4. The apostle, as he proceeds, applies the doctrine which he had advanced.

Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, considering the infinite dignity and glory of the Speaker; eagerly attentive to his words, storing them up in our memory, and fixing them as principles of action in our hearts; lest at any time we should let them slip, and our treacherous memories, like leaking vessels, should suffer them to run out; or they should glide by us (παραρεῦμεν) as a stream unnoticed and neglected. For if the word spoken by angels, the law given to Moses on mount Sinai, was stedfast and valid, stamped with divine authority, and guarded with the most awful sanctions; and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompence of reward, as the righteous punishment inflicted by divine justice; how shall we escape, what aggravated guilt and ruin must be on us who have heard the gospel, if we neglect so great salvation; great inexpressibly, if we consider the depths of the miseries into which we are fallen, the wonderful means used to extricate us, or the infinite mercies, blessings, and benefits, accruing to us thereby; a salvation, which comes recommended in the strongest manner, as at the first it began to be spoken by the Lord of life and glory incarnate, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him, the apostles and others, who, commissioned by him, proclaimed the glad tidings of his gospel through the world: God also bearing them witness to the divinity of that doctrine which they preached, both with signs and wonders, and with divine miracles of the most stupendous kind, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, the most astonishing and various, given according to his own will, for the confirmation of their testimony: an attestation far more excellent than was given to the law of Moses. Note, (1.) When matters of such eternal importance are at stake, as the salvation of an immortal soul, we can never be sufficiently careful and attentive. (2.) Whatever punishments God inflicts on sinners, they are no more than the just reward of their deeds. (3.) Neglect of the gospel is among the most atrocious crimes, and will be visited with the severest judgments.

5. For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the [i] world to come, whereof we speak. 6. But one in a certain place [k] testified, saying, [k] What is man, that thou art mindful of him? or the son of man, that thou visitest him? 7. [l] Thou madest him ‡ a little lower than the angels; thou crownedst him with glory and honour, and didst set him over the works of thy hands: 8. [m] Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet. For in that he put all in subjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him. But now we see not yet all things put under him. 9. But we see Jesus, who [n] was made a little lower than the angels [o] for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honour; that [p] he by the grace of God should taste death for every man.

Verses 5—9. The apostle returns to the comparison between the Mediator and the angelic hosts, showing his surpassing excellence.

For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come, whereof we speak, that is, the gospel dispensation, and the church under the New Testament; not employing them as he did under the Mosaical economy. But one in a certain place testified, when contemplating the glories of creation, What is man, how despicable a worm, that thou art mindful of him, and shouldst send thy co-eternal Son to take man's nature upon him? or what is the son of man, a poor frail mortal, that thou visitest him, and in the person of the incarnate Saviour should raise the human nature to such distinguished and transcendent glory. Thou madest him a little lower than the angels, or for a little while (βραχυ τι) during his state of humiliation and sufferings unto death; thou crownedst him with glory and honour, raising him triumphant from the grave, and exalting him to the throne of Majesty on high, didst set him over the works of thy hands, bestowing on him absolute and universal dominion over every creature; thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet; not only all the enemies of himself and people, sin, Satan, death, and hell, but all principalities and powers, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but in that also which is to come. For in that he put all in subjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him, angels, as well as others, being included within his absolute and universal empire. But now we see not yet all things put under him, either man in general, or any individual of the human species; so that these words appertain not to any of Adam's natural descendants; or under Jesus Christ himself at present, who hath not yet utterly subdued all his enemies, the time of his final conquest not being arrived. But we see this blessed Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels, during a while, for the suffering of death, that he might in the human nature die for the sins of the people; wherein he appeared inferior to these immortal spirits: we see him now crowned with glory and honour, on a throne, at the right hand of God, reigning till every foe shall become his footstool: that he by the grace of God, of his mere sovereign love and mercy, should taste death for every man; not for every individual of the human species, but for Jew or Gentile, for sinners of every rank or degree, even for all those many sons whom God before the world ordained unto glory. Note, (1.) The fontal cause of our salvation is the sovereign grace of God: the meritorious cause is the death of our incarnate Redeemer. (2.) In Christ, man's nature is exalted above the angels; and we, by virtue of union with him, have obtained a more excellent name than they.

10. For [q] it became him, [r] for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing [s] many sons unto glory, to make [t] the Captain of their salvation [u] perfect through sufferings. 11. For both [x] he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one: for which cause he is not ashamed to call them [y] brethren, 12. Saying, I will declare thy name unto my brethren; in the midst of the church will I sing praise unto thee. 13. And again, [z] I will put my trust in him. And again, [a] Behold I and the children which God hath given me.

Verses 10—13. The cross was the offensive doctrine at which the Hebrews stumbled. The apostle therefore shows the excellence of this method of salvation: how glorious to God: how effectual for us.

For it became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, it was most suitable and becoming, and served most eminently to display the glory of all his divine perfections, in bringing many sons unto glory, even the multitude of the redeemed whom he had chosen in Christ Jesus, to make the Captain, (αρχαγον) Leader and Author, of their salvation perfect through sufferings, completely fitted and consecrated thereby for the execution of his mediatorial office, having made full satisfaction to the divine justice for the sins of his people. For both he that sanctifieth, the Redeemer himself, who saves them from the guilt and power of sin, and they who are sanctified by his blood and Spirit, are all of one blood, receiving the human nature from one common parent; and, as included in the same covenant of redemption, have one Father, even God: for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren, but condescends to own the endearing relation, saying, Psalm xxii. 22. I will declare thy name unto my brethren, opening to them all the glories of divine grace displayed in the gospel: in the midst of the church will I sing praise unto thee, celebrating the wonders of thy love to thy peculiar people, Matt. xxvi. 30. And again, Ps. xviii. 2. I will put my trust in him, confident of his support under all my sufferings, and that they shall be effectual to the salvation of my people. And again, Behold I and the children which God hath given me, as the travail of my soul, for whom I am ready to undergo every affliction, that I may at last be able to present them before the presence of his glory with exceeding great joy. Note, (1.) God hath many sons whom he hath decreed to bring unto glory; and though they be few in any one age or place, yet when collected, they will be an innumerable multitude. (2.) We must be his children by adoption and grace, before we can receive the heavenly inheritance. (3.) In the method God hath taken to save sinners, by the incarnation of his Son, he hath acted eminently as became him, that in the most amazing exercise of grace, he might withal make the most signal display of his justice and inexorable hatred of sin. (4.) The way to glory is through sufferings: the Head and the members must walk in the same steps; and, since he hath gone before, he hath consecrated the cross, and to bear it is our honour, and will prove in the issue our unspeakable advantage. (5.) Christ is our elder brother; with what endearing affection ought we then to regard him, considering what he is to us, and what he hath done for us!

14. Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, [b] he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death [c] he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; 15. [d] And deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage. 16. For verily † he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him [e] the seed of Abraham. 17. Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made [f] like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people. 18. [g] For in that he himself hath suffered, being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted.

Verses 14—18. By Christ's incarnation was the redemption of his people to be accomplished.

Forasmuch then as the children, whom the Lord hath given him, are partakers of flesh and blood; and as in the human nature sin had been committed, in this nature it must be expiated; therefore he also himself likewise took part of the same, made exactly in the likeness of sinful flesh, and one with them; that through death, giving himself to suffer in their stead, and bearing their sins in his own body on the tree, he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil, by whose malice death first entered into the world, and who is the executioner of God's wrath upon sinners; but his dominion is now broken, and his kingdom overthrown, by the death and resurrection of Jesus, who died and rose again, that he might deliver them who through fear of death were all their life-time subject to bondage, the sting of death, which is sin, being taken out of their consciences, and all their dismal apprehensions of the consequences of death being utterly removed. For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham, assuming the human nature as a descendant from Abraham after the flesh. Wherefore, we may infer from hence, that in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren, sin only excepted; that, experiencing in his own person all the infirmities and miseries incident to the human nature, he might be a merciful and faithful High-priest, touched with tender sympathy towards them, and with all fidelity discharging his office, in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people, by the fullest satisfaction paid to the divine justice, and appearing, as their great High-priest, in the presence of God, with his own all-atoning blood; for in that he himself hath suffered, being tempted, he knows what sore temptations beset his people, can tenderly feel for them, and is able to succour them that are tempted, and make them with himself triumphant over all their enemies. Note, (1.) Christ is very man, as well as very God: it was as necessary that he should suffer in our nature, as it was essential to the efficacy of those sufferings, that he should be God incarnate. (2.) Satan, sin, and death, are all vanquished! Since the Saviour bled, they have no more power to hurt his redeemed people; and we may now triumph over them, since life and immortality are before us, through our crucified Jesus. (3.) Christ hath made reconciliation between the offended God and the sinful soul: since he hath offered the atonement, justice is satisfied, and grace enthroned. (4.) It is our comfort, under all our present trials and sufferings, that we have one to go to, who hath felt all our sorrows, knows our infirmity, and hath new power great as his love to succour and save to the uttermost all that come unto God by him.

CHAP. III.—ANNO DOMINI, 64.

In this chapter the apostle applies what he had said in the chapter foregoing concerning the priesthood of Christ. 1. In a serious pathetic exhortation, that this great High-priest that was discovered to them, might be seriously considered by them, ver. 1—7. and then adds many weighty counsels and cautions from ver. 7. to the end.

1. WHEREFORE,[a] [b] holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider [c] the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus; 2. Who was [d] faithful to him that [e] appointed him, as also [f] Moses was faithful in all his house. 3. [g] For this man was counted worthy of more glory than Moses, inasmuch as he who hath builded the house hath more honour than the house. 4. For every house is builded by some man; but he that [h] built all things is God. 5. And [i] Moses verily was faithful in all his house, as a servant, for a testimony of those things which were to be spoken after; 6. But Christ, [k] as a Son over his own house; [l] whose house are we, [m] if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end.

Verses 1—6. We have here the application of the foregoing considerations. The excellency of our great High-priest should draw up our hearts in all holy affection and humble adoration to him.

Wherefore, holy brethren, renewed in the spirit of your minds, partakers of the heavenly calling, admitted to all the blessings and privileges of the gospel, consider the Apostle and High-priest of our profession, Christ Jesus, sent of God, appointed to his office on purpose to make reconciliation, and whom we profess to believe in as the author of all blessedness: consider his transcendent dignity, and the characters he bears towards us.

1. With what fidelity he discharged his trust as a prophet. Who was faithful to him that appointed him, revealing to us all his Father's will; as also Moses, who was his eminent type, was faithful in all his house; communicating to the church in the wilderness, among whom Christ in the divine Shechinah dwelt, as in his own house, all the statutes and ordinances delivered unto him.

2. How far superior he is to Moses, as the builder of his own church. For this man, (οὗτος) this incarnate Jesus, was accounted worthy of more glory than Moses, inasmuch as he who hath builded the house hath more honour than the house. The master, owner, and builder of the house must needs be far above any member of the family which inhabits it; and Moses, though so distinguished, was but one of the many faithful in the church, of which the Lord Jesus is the maker and builder, therefore must be far inferior to him. For every house is builded by some man; but he that built all things, and regulated, furnished, and set in order every thing pertaining to his church, whether under the Jewish or evangelical dispensation, is God, even that Jesus who shares all the incommunicable attributes of Deity, and is very God, as well as very man.

3. Moses was but a servant; Christ is the Son over his own house. And Moses verily was faithful in all his house as a servant merely, for a testimony of those things which were to be spoken after; to foretell and prefigure in the rites enjoined by him, according to divine command, the great things that under the gospel should be more fully and clearly revealed. But Christ is infinitely his superior, as a Son over his own house, the church erected by him, and purchased by his blood: whose house are we that believe, the happy members of his family, if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope, which the gospel inspires, unto the end, which will prove the reality of our professions, and our assured interest in all the blessings of his holy family. Note, (1.) Christ is the glorious object, who should ever be in our eye: the more we consider him, the more shall we honour, love, and serve him. (2.) Those who are brethren in Christ, and truly partakers of the heavenly calling, will prove it by the holiness of their walk and conversation. (3.) They who are living members of Christ never fail, but hold fast their confidence and rejoicing of hope steadfast unto the end.

7. Wherefore [n] (as the Holy Ghost saith, [o] To-day if ye will hear his voice, 8. [p] Harden not your hearts, [q] as in the provocation, in the day of temptation in the wilderness: 9. [r] When your fathers tempted me, proved me, and saw my works forty years. 10. [s] Wherefore I was grieved with that generation, and said, They do alway err in their heart; and they have not known my ways. 11. So I [t] sware in my wrath, * They shall not enter into my rest.) 12. [u] Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God. 13. But [x] exhort one another daily, while it is called To-day; [y] lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. 14. For we are made [z] partakers of Christ, [a] if we hold the beginning of our confidence stedfast unto the end; 15. While it is said, [b] To-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, as in the provocation. 16. [c] For some, when they had heard, did provoke: howbeit [d] not all that came out of Egypt by Moses. 17. But with whom was he grieved forty years? was it not with [e] them that had sinned, whose carcases fell in the wilderness? 18. And to whom sware he that they should not enter into his rest, [f] but to them that believed not? 19. So we see that [g] they could not enter in because of unbelief.

Verses 7—19. As it is not nominal profession, but persevering fidelity, which can prove the truth of our relation to Jesus, the apostle proceeds to caution and warn them by former examples.

Wherefore as the Holy Ghost saith, Psal. xcv. 7. To-day if ye will hear his voice, without delay, or trifling with God's patience any longer, harden not your hearts against all the calls and warnings of God, as your fathers did in the provocation, in the day of temptation in the wilderness, when, by their murmurings, unbelief, and disobedience, your fathers tempted me, proved me, how mindful I am of my promise, and how long-suffering; and saw my works forty years; receiving the strongest evidences of my faithfulness, power, and grace. Wherefore, wearied out with their perverseness, and incorrigible ingratitude and infidelity, I was grieved with that generation, and said, They do alway err in their heart, stubborn, and wilfully rebellious; and they have not known my ways; they delight not in them, and choose their own delusions. So I sware in my wrath, justly offended by their continued impenitence, they shall not enter into my rest, the land of promise, the type of that eternal rest which remaineth for the faithful above. Note, (1.) Whilst the day of life and hope is prolonged, we are called to seize and improve the precious moment on which eternity depends. (2.) Continued hardness of heart against the calls of grace, and the warnings of providence, must infallibly issue in everlasting ruin. (3.) God bears long, but he will not bear always. He will swear in his wrath, that the incorrigible shall not enter into his rest.

The example which he had quoted, the apostle applies,

1. For their caution. Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you, as was in them, an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God. Note, (1.) Unbelief is the damning sin. (2.) There may be much heart unbelief under the most specious professions of faith. (3.) Where unbelief prevails, departure from God our Saviour necessarily follows. (4.) It calls for all our watchfulness and prayer, that our souls do not suffer shipwreck on this fatal rock.

2. He suggests the means of preventing the so much to be dreaded evil. But exhort and encourage one another daily, while it is called To-day; improve every opportunity during this fleeting moment of life, to excite each other to watchfulness and holy diligence; lest any of you, who have made profession of the gospel, be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin; your consciences lulled asleep, and your souls perverted and seduced from the simplicity of the gospel. Note, (1.) Christian brethren should maintain a holy jealousy over each other. (2.) Since the time is so short we need be earnest to redeem it for the best purposes. (3.) Sin comes with a most alluring aspect, and lurks often under the most specious appearances. (4.) Wherever sin gains possession of the heart, hardness and insensibility naturally follow; so that they who are in the most fatal danger are the least apprized of it.

3. He encourages them to end well as they had begun. For we are made partakers of Christ, or, we have been admitted to all the blessings and privileges which spring from vital union with him; if we hold the beginning of our confidence (ὑποστάσεως) or subsistence in him, steadfast unto the end, and perseveringly abide in this holy fellowship, without which our former professions would be proved hypocritical and insincere. Note, (1.) Every believer is a partaker of Christ, and all things are ours if we are his; his grace, merit, righteousness, and Spirit. (2.) To prove our union with Christ real, we must continue faithfully attached to him unto the end.

4. He returns to the subject he began with, to fortify them against apostasy. Improve the present moment, while it is said, To-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts as in the provocation; to-morrow you may be launched into eternity, and time be to you no more. For some, when they had heard, notwithstanding every warning, did provoke God to abandon them; howbeit not all that came out of Egypt by Moses; Caleb and Joshua, and those under twenty years of age, still survived. But with whom was he grieved forty years? was it not with them that had sinned, who bore the righteous vengeance due to their iniquities, and whose carcases fell in the wilderness? And to whom sware he that they should not enter into his rest, nor possess the promised Canaan, but to them that believed not, and rejected their own mercies? So we see that they could not enter in because of unbelief. Note, (1.) Unbelief of God's promises is among the most common and highly provoking iniquities. (2.) They who wilfully reject the counsel of God against their own souls, have only themselves to blame for their ruin. (3.) Far the greater part of mankind, yea, of professing Christians, live and die in their sins. The remnant that is saved is very small; two only out of the myriads of Israel entered into the land of rest. (4.) Such fearful instances should awaken in us a holy jealousy to make our calling and election sure.

Verses 1—10. The apostle, in the view of the foregoing observations,

1. Exhorts them to holy jealousy. Let us fear therefore for ourselves, lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest, into a state of happy peace with God here, and the eternal enjoyment of him hereafter, any of you should seem to come short of it: overcome by temptation, apostatizing from your professions, or faltering in your Christian course; so as, like Israel of old, to fail of the promised inheritance. For unto us was the gospel preached, clearly and plainly, as well as unto them, more obscurely in types and figures: but the word preached did not profit them, to any saving purpose; not being mixed with faith in them that heard it, and therefore never incorporated with their hearts, as the food, when digested, affords nourishment to the body. Nor will the gospel profit us any more than it did them, unless it be received by faith into the soul. Note, (1.) The same gospel in substance was preached under the Old Testament as well as the New; and only by faith then, any more than at present, could any man be justified and saved. (2.) The word is preached to multitudes who never profit thereby; for unless the Lord gives the discerning ear, and enables us to mix it with faith in our hearts, we hear in vain. (3.) It is a dreadful thing to hear of gospel grace, and yet to come short of it, and perish in our sins. (4.) The way to insure our entrance into the promised rest, is by constant watchfulness and holy caution. They who do not fear will fall.

2. He shows the surpassing excellency of that spiritual rest, to which, under the gospel, believers are admitted. For we who have believed do enter into rest, through Christ, having present peace with God by virtue of our union with our exalted Head, and are already sat down with him in heavenly places. As he said, As I have sworn in my wrath, If they shall enter into my rest; which implied a promise, that true believers should enter into rest; although the works were finished from the foundation of the world, and a sabbatical rest enjoined in consequence thereof. Yet the rest here spoken of is different from that: For he spoke in a certain place of the seventh day on this wise, Gen. ii. 2. And God did rest the seventh day from all his works, hallowing it for ever after as a day of holy rest; but this was not the rest concerning which God swore unto the Israelites. And in this place again, If they shall enter into my rest; As I live, saith the Lord, they shall not; which being spoken by David to the people of his own days, could not refer to the land of Canaan, of which for some hundreds of years they had been in possession. Seeing therefore it remaineth, that some must enter therein, as is implied in the very threatening: and they to whom it was first preached, the generality of them, at least, entered not in to the typical rest of Canaan, because of their unbelief: Again he limiteth, and fixes a certain day to come, saying in David, Psal. xcv. 7, 8. To-day, after so long a time had elapsed from their settlement in Canaan: as it is said, To-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, and ye shall enter into the promised rest. Now this must be different from the possession of the land of Canaan: For if Jesus, Joshua, had given them rest, and none farther was to have been expected, then would he not afterwards have spoken of another day, as he doth in that Psalm. Since then neither the sabbath nor the land of Canaan are meant in this passage of scripture, there remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God; a rest into which the spiritual Joshua should bring his faithful followers; a present, a spiritual rest, through faith in Jesus Christ, far preferable to either of these, and this is the earnest and foretaste of an eternal rest in glory everlasting. For he that is entered into his rest, the Lord Jesus Christ, since his ascension into heaven, having finished the work of his people's salvation which he had undertaken, he also hath ceased from his own works, having nothing more to do or suffer as the meritorious cause of their acceptance with God, all being finished on the cross; therefore he rests in glory, as God did rest from his works of creation: and all who believe in Jesus rest with him in the present enjoyment of the divine favour, and in their title to divine blessedness.

11. [s] Let us labour therefore to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of † unbelief. 12. For [t] the word of God is [u] quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. 13. [x] Neither is there any creature that is not manifest in his sight: but all things are naked and open unto the eyes of him with whom [y] we have to do. 14. [z] Seeing then that we have a great high priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us [a] hold fast our profession. 15. For we have not an high priest [b] which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet [c] without sin. 16. [d] Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need.

Verses 11—16. Such a glorious rest being promised,

1. The apostle exhorts them to secure a part therein. Let us labour therefore to enter into that rest, in opposition to every discouragement and difficulty from sin, Satan, and the world, which may be laid in our way, considering the awful examples abovementioned, lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief and perish in their sins. Note, The way to heaven is strait, and the gate narrow; we must strive if we would enter in; the slothful never went to glory.

2. He enforces his exhortation by the strongest argument. For the word of God, the uncreated Word, the Son, our Lord, and shortly to be our Judge, is quick, having life in and of himself, and the author of it to all his creatures; powerful in agency, and omnipotent: sharper than any two-edged sword, in his gospel word brought home to the conscience by the operation of the Holy Ghost: piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow: entering into the inmost recesses of the heart, carrying the deepest conviction, and working effectually to bring the whole inner man into obedience to himself; and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart: intimately acquainted with every secret of the soul. Neither is there any creature, in heaven or in earth, that is not manifest in his sight: nor can their inmost thoughts be hid from him: but all things are naked and open unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do, (γυμνα και τετραχηλισμενα.) As the sacrifices were flayed, laid open, and their entrails inspected with nicest care; so distinctly is every imagination of our hearts bare and exposed to him whose eyes are as a flame of fire, and at whose bar we must shortly give an account. How awakening a consideration! and what watchfulness and diligence should it excite in us, that we may be found of him in peace, and enter among his faithful ones into the promised rest.

Some by the word of God suppose the written word is meant, whose quickening, powerful, piercing, discerning efficacy is so great: and this, no doubt, is included, as being the instrument which the Lord makes use of; but I conceive the context and expressions show that Christ personally is here described and spoken of.

3. He returns to the consideration of the priesthood of Christ, mentioned (Chap. iii. 1.) as an encouraging motive to quicken their diligence, considering the power and grace which were engaged for their support. Seeing then that we have a great high-priest, whose excellence is so superlative; and that, having offered the all-atoning sacrifice, is passed into the heavens, into the holiest of all, to the immediate presence of God; even Jesus, the Son of God, one in essence with the Father, and as Mediator exalted to the highest dignity and glory, able to succour and save his people to the uttermost; therefore let us hold fast our profession, unwavering; for we have not an high-priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but one who tenderly sympathizes with every pang we feel in body or soul, and was in all points tempted like as we are, only without sin. His love and compassions therefore being great as his power, we may confidently expect salvation to the uttermost, and comfortably labour when we are assured it shall not be in vain in the Lord. Note, (1.) Christ is passed into the heavens, and for his people appears in the presence of God, to plead their cause, and insure their salvation. (2.) It is an unspeakable comfort to us under every temptation, that Jesus hath endured it before us, knows our weakness, feels for our distress, and will proportion his grace to our necessities. (3.) This should embolden us under the severest conflicts to hold fast our profession, nor ever to be moved away from the hope of the gospel, seeing he is near that strengtheneth us.

4. The glorious high-priesthood of Jesus should encourage us to draw near to God in prayer. Let us therefore, having such an all-prevailing advocate, come boldly to the throne of grace, where our reconciled God in majesty and love unspeakable appears, inviting our applications, with humble reverence, and filial confidence, that we may obtain mercy, and pardons multiplied from day to day, and grace to help in every time of need; in time, manner, measure, vouchsafed according to our danger, trials and distresses, till he shall land us safe on the shores of eternal rest. Note, (1.) They who know the inestimable privilege of having a throne of grace to go to, will not fail to be found there often upon their knees. (2.) There is nothing we can want of which we are not assured of a supply, when by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving we make our requests known to a reconciled God. (3.) All our hopes of mercy or grace arise purely from the great high-priest, who lives to make intercession for us; for in him God is always well pleased, and with us for his sake. (4.) Humble boldness becomes a child of God when approaching that throne where grace reigns through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord.

CHAP. V.—ANNO DOMINI, 64.

In this chapter the apostle continues his discourse upon the priesthood of Christ, a sweet subject, which he would not so soon dismiss. And here, 1. He explains the nature of the priestly office in general, ver. 1—3. 2. The proper and regular call there must be to this office, ver. 4—6. 3. The requisite qualifications for the work, ver. 7—9. 4. The peculiar order of the priesthood of Christ; it was not after the order of Aaron, but Melchisedec, ver. 6, 7, 10. 5. He reproves the Hebrews, that they had not made those improvements in knowledge, as might have made them capable of looking into the more abstruse and mysterious parts of scripture, ver. 11—14.

1. FOR [a] every high-priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins: 2. [b] Who * can have compassion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way; for that he himself also is compassed with infirmity. 3. [c] And by reason hereof he ought, as for the people, so also for himself, to offer for sins. 4. [d] And no man taketh this honour unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron. 5. So also [e] Christ glorified not himself to be made an high-priest; but he that said unto him, Thou art my Son, to-day have I begotten thee. 6. As he saith also in another place, [f] Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec. 7. Who in the days of his [g] flesh, when [h] he had offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears unto him that was able to save him from death, and [i] was heard † in that he feared; 8. [k] Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered; 9. And [l] being made perfect, he became [m] the author of eternal salvation unto all them [n] that obey him; 10. [o] Called of God an high-priest after the order of Melchisedec.

Verses 1—10. We have here,

1. An account of the sacerdotal office in general. For every high-priest taken from among men, under the legal dispensation, is of the same nature with his brethren, and ordained for men in things pertaining to God, on their behalf to minister in holy things, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins, according to the law, as the type and figure of him who in his own person, as both high-priest and sacrifice, should, in the fulness of time, offer the true atonement, and make the perfect reconciliation for sin, causing the persons and prayers of his people to be accepted by the Father; who can bear with, and have compassion on the ignorant, sympathizing with them; and having pity on them that are out of the way; desirous to bring them back again to God, and peace of conscience; for that he himself is also compassed with infirmity, and liable to every affliction under which his brethren groan. And by reason hereof, since he himself is a poor infirm creature, and guilty sinner as well as others, he ought, as for the people, so for himself, to offer an atoning sacrifice. But herein the surpassing glory of the great High-priest of our profession most eminently appears; for while, as partaker of the human nature, with infinitely greater compassion, he feels for the erring and the ignorant, and stands to offer his all-prevailing sacrifice for them, he doth it purely on their account, not on his own, being himself without sin.

2. A divine appointment was necessary for the office of priesthood. And no man taketh this honour unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron, appointed thereto by the Lord's immediate order and authority. So also Christ glorified not himself to be made a high-priest, assuming that honour in his human nature without a divine warrant; but he was solemnly called and qualified for this office by him that said unto him, Thou art my Son, to-day have I begotten thee; intimating the dignity of his person who was to be invested in the pontifical office. As he saith also in another place, Ps. cx. 4. Thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec; an order prior and superior to that of Aaron, Christ having an eternal and unchangeable priesthood, ever living and alone sufficient to manage all the concerns of his people. Note, (1.) Before we presume to minister in holy things, we must produce a divine call, lest intruding into an office for which we have no commission, we should expose ourselves to shame as intruders, instead of reaping honour by the service. (2.) The High-priest which God hath himself appointed, we may be assured he will accept, and all our oblations in his hand shall be received as sacrifices of a sweet smell.

3. We are told how he executed his office, and how effectual it was on the behalf of his people. Who in the days of his flesh, when here below oppressed with manifold and severe sufferings, he had offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears, especially in his agonizing struggle in the garden, looking up unto him that was able to save his soul from death, and those terrors which distressed his innocent soul; and was heard, in the support ministered to him, and in his glorious resurrection from the dead, because he feared, and with holy reverence submitted to his Father's will. Though he were a son, the eternal Son of the Father, and one with him in nature and perfections, yet having condescended to take our nature upon him, learned he obedience by the things which he suffered; approving himself cheerfully submissive to his Father's will, and yielding himself up to death, even the death of the cross. And being made perfect, fully accomplishing by his obedience and sufferings the work which he had undertaken, and thereby being consecrated for the exercise of his priesthood in heaven, he became the author of eternal salvation; purchasing it by his blood, securing it by his advocacy, and applying it by his Spirit to the souls of his people; a salvation not only from present guilt and corruption, but including all the blessings of glory everlasting, which are secured unto all them that obey him, and follow him as the Captain of their salvation; called of God, and fully qualified for his office, as a high-priest after the order of Melchisedec, ever living to make intercession for his people, and therefore a Saviour unto them to the uttermost. Note, (1.) God's adopted sons, like their great Head, are to expect sufferings, and under them to learn obedience and submission. (2.) None ever in the human nature endured any thing like what the Son of God hath suffered voluntarily for our sake: how then dare we murmur or complain! (3.) In his agony the Saviour prayed, to teach us whither we should look under all our distresses; and if with faith and fervour, as he did, we cry, we shall as assuredly be heard and delivered. (4.) The salvation which the Son of God hath obtained for us, is complete and everlasting. He hath borne the penalty of sin, and fulfilled the righteousness of the law, that we might have all the benefit, and be entitled to the eternal reward of glory. (5.) All who hope to reign with him, desire to be ruled by him; and cheerfully yielding themselves to his holy will, take up their cross, and follow the Captain of their salvation; and, unless we do this, our hope in him is but delusion.

Verses 11—14. The apostle pauses for a moment, and stays the farther consideration of the subject which he was upon, to introduce a needful rebuke of their dulness and inattention to the great things of God's word. Having mentioned the second time that remarkable personage, Melchisedec, he observes, Of whom we have many things to say, and hard to be uttered, difficult to be understood in themselves, and the more so to you, seeing ye are dull of hearing, slothful and negligent to search into the sacred oracles, that you might become more deeply acquainted with their important contents. For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, considering all the means and advantages which you have enjoyed, ye have need, so little progress have ye made in the school of Christ, that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God, as the child must learn his letters in order to spell and read; and rather declining than advancing in knowledge, are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat, as babes at the breast, instead of that state of manhood to which you should ere this have arrived. For every one that useth milk, and cannot relish or digest any thing beyond the first principles of the doctrines of Christ, is unskilful and unexperienced in the word of righteousness, in the gospel, where Christ's divine righteousness is revealed, and we are taught how to walk and please God; for such a one is a babe in understanding. But strong meat, the sublimer doctrines of truth, belong to them that are of full age, and may, comparatively, be styled perfect men, (τελειων) even those, who by reason of use, being experimentally acquainted with the blessed gospel, have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil, accurate to discover truth and detect error, and as eager to embrace and pursue the one, as to detest and avoid the other. Note, (1.) They who have long enjoyed the richest advantages, are expected to show proportionable improvement in grace and knowledge. (2.) It is a great grief to ministers, and the sin and shame of their people, that, after years of labour, many of them have yet to learn the first principles of gospel truth. (3.) The scripture is suited to every state; there is milk for babes, and strong meat for men; it is the wisdom of a minister to be able to divide to every man his portion in due season. (4.) The word of God contains mysteries, wherein the most deep-read and experienced have much to learn, whilst the grand truths are plain and obvious, and such as the weakest capacities may comprehend.

CHAP. VI.—ANNO DOMINI, 64.

In this chapter the apostle exhorts the Hebrews to make a better proficiency in religion than they had done, as the best way to prevent apostasy, the dreadful nature of which he sets forth, ver. 1—8. And then expresses his good hopes concerning them, that they would persevere in faith and holiness, and sets before them the great encouragement they have from God, both with respect to their duty and happiness, from ver. 9. to the end.

1. THEREFORE, [a] leaving * the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the [b] foundation of [c] repentance from [d] dead works, and of faith toward God, 2. [e] Of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of [f] resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment. 3. [g] And this will we do, if God permit. 4. For [h] it is impossible for those who were [i] once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, 5. And [k] have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, 6. If they shall fall away, [l] to renew them again unto repentance; seeing they [m] crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame. 7. [n] For the earth, which drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth herbs meet for them † by whom it is dressed, receiveth blessing from God: 8. [o] But that which beareth thorns and briers is rejected, and is nigh unto cursing; whose end is to be burned.

Verses 1—8. The apostle here,

1. Exhorts the Hebrews to advance in spiritual attainments. Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection, to a more advanced state of grace and understanding; not laying again the foundation, and continuing still to insist on the first principles of the Christian doctrine, but proceeding to greater heights in heavenly wisdom. The principles I speak of are those, [1.] Of repentance from dead works, implying a sense of the evil and danger of sin, the wages of which is death, an abhorrence of it, and real conversion of heart from the love and practice of all iniquity. And [2.] Of faith towards God, since all who come to him must believe his being, attributes, and perfections; and especially that he is our reconciled God in the Son of his love Christ Jesus. And these two principles of Christianity were typified under the Mosaical dispensation by the doctrine of baptisms, or divers washings prescribed to the temple worshippers, which signified the purification of the conscience, through faith in the blood of Jesus, and by the power of his Spirit, and of laying on of hands upon the head of the sacrifice, with penitent confession of sin, in token of transferring their guilt to their substitute. [3.] And of the resurrection of the dead, which may be reckoned another first principle of Christianity. And [4.] Of eternal judgment, when every man must appear to give an account at God's bar, and to receive his sentence to be happy or miserable for ever, in body and soul, according to his deeds. These having been so often insisted upon, we design to leave them to your serious reflection, and pass on to sublimer things. And this we will do if God permit. Note, (1.) When the foundation of religion is laid, the superstructure must be raised in an increase of knowledge, grace, and holiness. (2.) All we purpose must be undertaken in dependence upon God's support, for without him we can do nothing aright.

2. To quicken them to diligence, he sets before them the fearful case of apostates. For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and so far received the knowledge of the truth as to make profession of it, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, in some superficial impressions made upon their consciences, though their heart hath remained unchanged; and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, in some of his miraculous operations, and have tasted of the good word of God, receiving it, as the stony-ground hearers, for a while with joy, and, of the powers of the world to come, enabled to perform many wonderful works; if, after all this, they shall fall away from the gospel to Judaism, or heathenism, the case is desperate, it is impossible to renew them again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, approving the wickedness of those who nailed him to the tree as an impostor, and put him to an open shame, by assenting to the black calumnies of his murderers, turning from him as a deceiver, and renouncing his gospel as an untruth; for such apostasy, being a sin against the very remedy, cannot but be necessarily fatal. Note, (1.) Hypocrites may go far and come short of heaven: they may have many right notions in religion, make a fair profession, feel pangs of conviction, and transient flashes of joy under the ordinance; yea, they might have possessed even the power of miracles, and yet never have been partakers of the grace of God in truth. (2.) Satan will often seek to distress the souls of the sincere, when under darkness or temptation, with these terrible declarations: let it therefore be remembered, that it is never impossible to renew those unto repentance, in whom the Lord still awakens a desire to repent and turn to him.

3. The different states of the gracious soul and the apostate are here described. For the earth, which drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth herbs meet for them by whom it is dressed, receiveth blessing from God, so the faithful heart, watered with the dew of divine influences from the Lord, brings forth the fruits of righteousness, which by Jesus Christ are acceptable and well pleasing to God, who blesses his own work, and gives a more abundant increase of every holy and gracious disposition. But that ground which, after all the culture bestowed upon it, still beareth thorns and briers, is rejected by the owner as barren and is nigh unto cursing; whose end is to be burned: so where, amidst means of grace, unbelief and hardness of heart remain, and after all their professions men turn aside to error in principle, and ungodliness in practice, such are in God's sight reprobate, his curse lieth upon them, which soon shall be fearfully executed; when, cast into the belly of hell, they shall lie down in everlasting burnings, and none can quench them.

9. But, beloved, [p] we are persuaded better things of you, and things that accompany salvation, though we thus speak. 10. For [q] God is not unrighteous, to forget your work and labour of love, which ye have shewed towards his name, in that ye have ministered to the saints, and do minister. 11. And we desire that every one of you do [r] shew the same diligence, [s] to the full assurance of hope unto the end: 12. [t] That ye be not slothful, but [u] followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises. 13. Verses 9—20. The apostle from the most awful warnings, passes on to the most powerful encouragements to steadfastness and perseverance.

1. He professes his good opinion of them in general, at least. But, beloved, we are persuaded better things of you, and things that accompany salvation, though we thus speak, that ye will never prove apostates, but are actually partakers of those blessings of justification, adoption, and grace, which cannot but issue in eternal glory.

2. He suggests the reason on which his confidence was built. For God is not unrighteous or unfaithful to his promises, and therefore will not forget your work and labour of love, the genuine principle of all holy obedience, and assured proof of your interest in all the blessings of the everlasting covenant: which love ye have showed toward his name, in that ye have ministered to the saints, and do continue to minister unto them under all their afflictions. Note, (1.) Our love to God must appear in every work and labour of love for the good of his people. (2.) They who give genuine proofs of their faith unfeigned, by a conversation such as becometh godliness, will find God faithful to his promises, and their bounteous rewarder.

3. He exhorts them to persevere. And we desire that every one of you do show the same diligence, in every good word and work, your fruits of righteousness abiding and abounding, to the full assurance of hope unto the end, growing up to a more satisfied confidence of your interest in the eternal blessedness, and carried as a ship under full sails into the port of eternal rest. See therefore that ye be not slothful, but diligent in every means of grace, and in the duties of your calling, as followers of them, who have trod before this holy path, and through faith and patience, amidst every trial, persevering unto the end, are now gone to inherit the promises in glory everlasting. Note, (1.) If we have good hope through grace, we should seek to grow up to the full assurance of hope unto the end. (2.) Diligence in religion, as in every thing else, is the only way to thrive. (3.) The examples of those who are gone to glory before us should encourage and quicken us to follow them. (4.) Where faith and patience are implanted in the heart, there perseverance is the necessary fruit.

4. The faithfulness of God to his promises should engage their fidelity to him. For when God made promise to Abraham, (Gen. xxii. 16, 17.) concerning the Messiah his future seed, because he could swear by no greater, he sware by himself, to give him the strongest assurance of the fulfilment of the promise, saying, Surely, as I live, my being and perfections are engaged to accomplish my word, blessing, I will bless thee, and multiplying, I will multiply thee, so that thou shalt be a father of many nations, and on thy spiritual seed shall thy blessing descend to the latest ages. And so after he had patiently endured, through manifold afflictions, he obtained the promise of a son, the pledge of that Messiah, who should descend from him, and at last departed himself in the faith, and entered the eternal world of glory. For men verily swear by the greater, solemnly appealing to God as the witness of truth and the avenger of falsehood, and an oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife, this being judged the most solemn and decisive evidence, which can be given to silence doubt, and terminate dispute. Wherein God, willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath, in condescension to our weakness, and to give us the utmost satisfaction with regard to the unchangeableness of his purposes of grace towards his people, and of the certainty of the accomplishment of every promise he had made, whatever difficulties might seem to prevent it: that by two immutable things, the promise and oath of God, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have strong consolation, filled with the sweetest delight, and supported under all our trials, who have fled for refuge, as the manslayer to the appointed city, (Numb. xxxv. 11, 12.) with eagerness, under an awakened sense of our guilt and danger, to lay hold upon the hope set before us, even Christ, the rock of his people's confidence: which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil, Christ, the object of our hope, being ascended into heaven, thither the grace of hope follows him, keeping the soul unmoved amidst all the storms of temptation: whither the forerunner, our representative, is for us entered, even Jesus, the exalted Saviour, gone to prepare a place for us, made a high-priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec. Note, (1.) In Christ there is a refuge provided for the chief of sinners, and all who flee to him shall not only be safe but happy! (2.) Since the promises are confirmed by two such immutable things as the counsel and oath of God, with what confidence ought we to trust upon them! (3.) In this tempestuous world we should be hourly exposed to shipwreck, if hope did not enable us to ride out the storm, having cast anchor within the veil. (4.) Where our forerunner is entered for us, we must follow. Is he in heaven? then shall we be shortly with him where he is, that we may behold and share his glory.

Verses 1—3. Thrice had the apostle quoted the testimony borne to the Son of God out of the Psalms, as a high-priest after the order of Melchisedec: of this remarkable person he here gives an account, and we may herein trace the resemblance he bore to his great antitype.

1. His name was Melchisedec, or king of righteousness, the figure of him on whose shoulders the universal government should rest, who, with the most distinguished rectitude, should administer the affairs of his kingdom, and is the author of everlasting righteousness to his people.

2. He was king of Salem, that is, of peace. So is Christ eminently the prince of peace, having procured it for us by his blood, applying it by his Spirit, and setting up his throne of peace within our hearts.

3. He was said to be a priest of the most high God. So was Jesus consecrated to this office by his Father, and through his sacrifice alone can we obtain reconciliation and acceptance with God.

4. He blessed Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings, as his superior. And as Abraham gave him a tenth of all, he must needs be a priest of a higher rank and order than Levi, or Aaron, who descended from this patriarch; and thus hath our incarnate Lord a priesthood infinitely excelling the Aaronical, and of far more extensive influence, ministering in behalf of Gentiles as well as Jews.

5. Melchisedec's original is entirely concealed; no mention is made of his father or mother, of his birth or death, that he might more strikingly represent the Son of God, who abideth a priest continually, appointed to his office before the worlds were, and to the end of time continuing to exercise it on the behalf of his people, without predecessor, partner, or successor, alone appearing before the throne, and ever living to make intercession for us.

4. Now, consider [d] how great this man was, unto whom even the [e] patriarch Abraham gave the tenth of the spoils. 5. And verily [f] they that are of the sons of Levi, who receive the office of the priesthood, have a commandment to take tithes of the people according to [g] the law, that is, of their brethren, though they come out of the loins of Abraham: 6. But he, whose † descent is not counted from them, received tithes of Abraham, and blessed him that [h] had the promises. 7. And, without all contradiction, [i] the less is blessed of the better. 8. And here men that die receive tithes; but there he receiveth them, of whom it is witnessed [k] that he liveth. 9. And as I may so say, Levi also, who receiveth tithes, [l] payed tithes in Abraham. 10. For he was yet in the loins of his father when Melchisedec met him.

Verses 4—10. To guard the Hebrews from their attachment to the abolished priesthood of Levi, and lead them to the great High Priest of their profession, Christ Jesus, he shows his surpassing excellence above Aaron or his sons. (1.) Because they, being in Abraham's loins, paid tithes to Melchisedec; and though commissioned afterwards to receive tithes of their brethren, yet virtually now, as included in their father, they paid tithes to this priest of God, acknowledged him as their superior, who was but the type of our Lord. (2.) Because the less is blessed by the greater; and herein therefore Abraham himself, though favoured with such distinguished promises, was inferior to Melchisedec, and much more must his sons be who should descend from him; and how much more excellent still than they must he then be, of whom Melchisedec was only the representative? (3.) They were all dying men, and the succession and descent of the sons of Levi are well known, but Melchisedec's generation is concealed; we only hear of him that he liveth, as the figure of him who really hath an unchangeable priesthood, and actually lives for ever to intercede on the behalf of his people. Note, If Abraham's paying tithes was reckoned the act of those who were then in his loins, and imputed to them as done by their covenant-heads, we see how Adam's sin, and Christ's righteousness, are severally imputed to the natural descendants of the one, and the spiritual seed of the other.

11. [m] If therefore perfection were by the Levitical priesthood, (for under it the people received the law,) what further need was there that another priest should rise [n] after the order of Melchisedec, and not be called after the order of Aaron? 12. For the priesthood being [o] changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law. 13. For he of whom these things are spoken pertaineth to another tribe, of which no man gave [p] attendance at the altar. 14. For it is evident that our Lord sprang [q] out of Juda; of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood. 15. And it is yet far more evident; [r] for that after the similitude of Melchisedec there ariseth another priest; 16. Who is made, not after [s] the law of a carnal commandment, but [t] after the power of an endless life. 17. For he testifieth, [u] Thou art a priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedec. 18. [t] For there is verily a disannulling of the commandment going before, for the weakness and unprofitableness thereof. 19. [u] For the law made nothing perfect, ‡ but the bringing in of [x] a better hope did; by the which we [y] draw nigh unto God. 20. And inasmuch as not without an oath he was made priest; 21. (For those priests were made ‖ without an oath; but this with an oath, by him that said unto him, [z] The Lord sware, and will not repent, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec;) 22. By so much was Jesus made [a] a surety of [b] a better testament. 23. And [c] they truly were many priests, because they were not suffered to continue

‡ Gr. perfected.

Verses 11—28. Had perfection been by the Levitical priesthood, so that the consciences of the worshippers had thereby been fully purged from sin, and had the state of the church under the legal dispensation been complete, there could be no need that a newer and higher order of priesthood should afterwards be instituted, after the order of Melchisedec, and not after the order of Aaron; and such a change of the priesthood implied a change of the whole ceremonial law, which was inseparably interwoven therewith; both law and priesthood therefore were to be abolished, in order to introduce another dispensation, more excellent and glorious than the former, even that of the gospel. That such a change of the priesthood and law is made, is evident.

1. Because our Lord, the priest who should arise after the order of Melchisedec, sprung from the tribe of Judah, not from Levi, and therefore, according to the law, was forbidden to officiate at the altar.

2. The priesthood of Christ was of an entirely different nature from that of the sons of Levi. They were made after the law of a carnal commandment, which settled their succession, appointed the rites of their consecration, and those who filled the office were dying men; but Christ is made a high priest of a more excellent kind, after the power of an endless life, acting without either partner or successor, living to discharge his office in the behalf of his people for ever and ever.

3. The efficacy of the gospel priesthood was far superior to that under the law, which was abrogated because of its weakness and unprofitableness, being insufficient to purge the conscience from guilt, or to secure unto the sinner justification to life, making nothing perfect, and was designed merely to lead us to Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But Christ hath brought in a better hope; his own sacrifice and abiding priesthood give boldness and access to God, and sure hope of favour and acceptance before him.

4. The superior excellence of Christ's priesthood appears in the manner of his consecration; The Levitical priests were made without an oath, but he with an oath, to denote the immutability, efficacy, and eternity of his sacerdotal character. By so much was Jesus made a surety of a better testament, or covenant, having undertaken completely to answer all divine requirements on the behalf of his redeemed, that he might secure to them the accomplishment of all the promised blessings, a covenant far better than the Mosaical, both in the clearness of the light which accompanies its administration, and the extensiveness of its efficacy, as reaching to Gentiles as well as Jews.

5. The Aaronical high-priests, as mortal men, were many, succeeding each other, as death removed them from their office, but this glorious person, whom Melchisedec typified, hath an unchangeable priesthood that never passes from him, because he liveth for ever to discharge his sacerdotal functions; wherefore, we may assuredly conclude, that Jesus is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them; and therefore they can be in no circumstances of distress or danger from which he cannot deliver them; and his exaltation at the right hand of God is on purpose for their benefit, that he may so manage all their affairs as effectually to secure their final salvation, whilst coming to God by him they receive continual pardon, grace, and strength, to preserve them unto the end.

6. Christ appears transcendently glorious above all other priests in his moral qualifications. For such an high-priest became us, and no other could have stood us any stead, but one who is holy, harmless, undefiled, and separated from sinners, both in nature and practice, and made higher than the heavens, in dignity above the angelic host, or rather in purity of nature, excelling them. Who needeth not daily, as those high-priests of the Levitical order, to offer up sacrifices first for their own sins, and then for the sins of the people, on the great day of atonement; for Christ, having no sin of his own to expiate, needed no sacrifice; and as to his people's iniquities, his own sacrifice was available for ever; for this he did once, when he offered up himself without spot to God, as their everlasting propitiation. For the law maketh men high-priests which have infirmity, and being sinners as well as others, must offer for themselves as well as the people; but the word of the oath, which was since the law, maketh the Son high-priest, who is consecrated for evermore, or perfected, who being in nature sinless and impeccable, never could need a sacrifice for himself, but having offered one of eternal efficacy on the behalf of his people, lives for ever to plead it in the presence of God, that they might reap the unutterably blessed fruits of it in their final and everlasting salvation.

CHAP. VIII.—ANNO DOMINI, 64.

In this chapter the apostle pursues his former subject, the priesthood of Christ. And, 1. He sums up what he had already said, ver. 1, 2. 2. He sets before them the necessary parts of the priestly office, ver. 3—5. And, 3. Largely illustrates the excellency of the priesthood of Christ, by considering the excellency of that new dispensation of the covenant of grace for which Christ is the Mediator, ver. 6. to the end.

1. NOW of the things which we have spoken this is the sum: [a] We have such an high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; 2. [b] A minister * of the sanctuary, and of [c] the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man.

c Ch. 9. 11. John 1. 14. Mat. 1. 20. Luke 1. 35.

Verses 1, 2. We have here a summary of the foregoing observations: Now of the things which we have spoken, this is the sum: we have such an high-priest, so great and glorious, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens, invested with all power and authority to secure all blessedness for his people in time and in eternity; a minister of the sanctuary, officiating as our high-priest in heaven, which the Jewish sanctuary typified, and of the true tabernacle in his human nature, of which the earthly tabernacle was the figure, which God pitched and not man, having prepared for him a body, wherein the fulness of the Godhead should reside. And with what confidence should this inspire us, when we consider who now ministers for us before the throne of God!

3. [d] For every high priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices: wherefore it is of necessity that this man have somewhat also to offer. 4. For [e] if he were on earth, he should not be a priest, seeing that there are priests that offer gifts according to the law: 5. Who serve [f] unto the example and shadow of heavenly things, as Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle: [g] for, See, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern shewed to thee in the mount. 6. [h] But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the mediator of a better † covenant, which was established upon better promises. 7. For if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second. 8. For, finding fault with them, he saith, [k] Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah: 9. [i] Not according to the covenant [m] that I made with their fathers in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt; [n] because they continued not in my covenant, and I regarded them not, saith the Lord. 10. For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel, After those days, saith the Lord, I will ‡ [o] put my laws into their mind, and write them ‖ in their hearts: and [p] I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people: 11. And they shall not teach every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, [q] Know the Lord; for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest. 12. [r] For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more. 13. In that he saith, A new covenant, he hath made the first old. [s] Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away.

Verses 3—13. The apostle proceeds,

1. To set forth the office of the high-priest, and Christ's conformity thereto. For every high-priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices, the blood of which he afterwards carried into the holy place: wherefore it is of necessity that this glorious person have somewhat also to offer, a sacrifice suitable to his dignity, with the blood of which he might appear within the veil, before the throne of God in glory. For if he were on earth, and had continued here below, he should not be a priest, nor could have discharged that most peculiar part of his pontifical office, the appearing within the veil with the blood of the sacrifice, seeing that there are priests that offer gifts according to the law, and none of any other tribe but that of Levi could be admitted there; who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things, that priesthood and service being entirely typical of Christ, as Moses was admonished of God, when he was about to make the tabernacle: for, See (saith he) that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount. Necessary therefore was it that Christ, having offered his own body a sacrifice on the cross, should, with the blood which he had shed, appear in the presence of God, and discharge that glorious high-priesthood whereunto he had been appointed.

2. He shows the transcendent excellency of Christ's ministry above that of the sons of Aaron, as being the mediator of a better covenant, established upon better promises. The covenant of grace, as revealed in the gospel, far exceeding the Sinai covenant, whether considered as a political covenant of peculiarity, and insuring to the people temporal blessings, merely as the fruit of an external obedience to the letter of the law; or if we admit its latitude to be more extensive, and that it included spiritual and eternal blessings; yet as that dispensation was clothed with darkness and terror, the gospel far exceeds it, as containing a more clear revelation of God's grace, extending its promises to Gentiles as well as Jews, being accompanied with a more abundant measure of the Spirit, and more particularly and fully leading the soul to seek and expect, not so much temporal, as spiritual and heavenly blessings. For if that first covenant, entered into with the Jews at Sinai, had been faultless, (for, however well suited to answer the purposes of God at that time, yet it was deficient, and wanted much of that light and clearness, with which afterwards God intended to reveal his designs of grace,) could that have been sufficient to accomplish the great ends God had in view, then should no place have been sought for the second, as we find was the case. For God finding fault with them, and reproving the Jews by the prophet Jeremiah, he saith, Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make, or finish, a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah, a covenant of absolute promises, and sure to all the spiritual Israel, Gentiles as well as Jews: not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt; because they continued not in my covenant, but unfaithfully departed from it, and I regarded them not, saith the Lord; withdrew my favour from them, and no longer, as a husband, vouchsafed them my love and protection. For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the Lord, with the spiritual Israel of all nations; I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts, giving them the clearest views of my designs of grace, and engaging their souls to my love and service, by the powerful operations of my Spirit, making a deeper and more abiding impression upon their hearts, than the letters of the law made on the tables of stone: and I will be to them a God, absolutely and everlastingly reconciled to them, and causing them to experience my continual protection and blessing, and they shall be to me a people, engaging to serve me by the most effectual ties of gratitude as well as duty, and secured in their allegiance by my effectual grace, so that they shall never depart from me. And they shall not need to teach every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord, as under the former dispensation, where all the typical service required constant explication; but under the clearer dispensation of light and truth in the gospel this would be less necessary: not that the ministry of the word, or private instructions among Christians, should be set aside, but that in those days the knowledge of divine things should be more universally diffused, and all believers be under the more abundant teachings of the Spirit: for all shall know me from the least unto the greatest, as their reconciled God and Father in the great Redeemer, whatever difference there may be as to the degree of their attainments. For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, through the propitiation of their great high-priest, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more, pardoning them freely, fully, and for ever. Now in that he saith, A new covenant, he hath made the first old, abolishing the Mosaical dispensation, because of its weakness and unprofitableness. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old, as is the case with the Jewish economy at present, like a person dying with age, is ready to vanish away, the time being at hand, when, by the destruction of the temple, the whole service must cease, never to be resumed again. Note, (1.) Our fidelity to God in the covenant of grace depends upon his having engaged for our stability. (2.) God freely and for ever pardons the sins of his people; they shall sink as a stone in the abyss of water, and never rise up again. (3.) The dispensation of the covenant of grace, under which we live, should be matter of our unspeakable comfort and unceasing thankfulness, wherein all the riches of God's grace, without a veil, are laid open before his chosen people, and their eternal happiness infallibly secured.

CHAP. IX.—ANNO DOMINI, 64.

The apostle, in pursuance of his main design, proceeds to treat, 1. Of the tabernacle, the place of worship, ver. 1—5. 2. Of the worship and services performed in the tabernacle, ver. 6, 7, 3. Delivers the spiritual sense and the main design of all, ver. 8. to the end.

1. THEN verily the first covenant had also [a] * ordinances of divine service, and a worldly sanctuary. 2. For [b] there was a tabernacle made; the first, wherein was the candlestick, and the table, and the shew-bread; which is called † the sanctuary. 3. [c] And after the second vail, the tabernacle which is called the Holiest of all; 4. Which had the golden censer, and [d] the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, wherein was [e] the golden pot that had manna, and [f] Aaron's rod that budded; and [g] the tables of the covenant; 5. And over it the [h] cherubims of glory shadowing the [i] mercy-seat; of which we cannot now speak particularly.

Verses 1—5. The apostle begins with an account of the tabernacle, where the chief part of the service under the Mosaical dispensation, or first covenant, was performed. It consisted of two parts:

1. The outward, where stood the candlestick of beaten gold, and the table, with the show-bread laid thereon; and this was called the sanctuary, where the daily service of God was performed. The whole building was figurative of Christ's body: the candlestick pointed him out as the true light who should come into the world, where, without him, spiritual darkness must have been for ever spread abroad; and the table of show-bread pointed him out as the living bread that cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world, upon whom his people, consecrated to be spiritual priests, feed, and maintain the most endeared communion thereby with each other.

2. The inward, which a second veil separated from the outer part of the tabernacle, and was called the Holiest of all, the figure of heaven itself, into which none entered but the high-priest alone once a-year, on the great day of expiation, with the golden censer full of incense, which typified Christ's intercession in heaven for his people; and there stood the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, which signified him who was to be the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth, wherein were the tables of the law written with the finger of God, and, by the side of it, the golden pot that had manna, which was miraculously preserved from putrefaction, signifying the daily living bread with which Christ feeds his Israel in this howling wilderness, giving them meat to eat which the world knoweth not of. There also was Aaron's rod that budded, from a dry stick producing flowers and fruit, emblematical of him who rose as the rod out of the stem of Jesse, to be by divine appointment our high-priest for ever. And over the ark were the cherubims of beaten gold, two winged figures, that shadowed the mercy-seat, over which the glorious Shechinah dwelt, and on which the blood was sprinkled in the great day of atonement, intimating to us, that Christ, as our propitiatory, interposes between the wrath of a holy God and the transgressors of his law, to save us from the eternal ruin which must otherwise necessarily ensue. But into the mystical meaning of these things the apostle waves to enter, of which we cannot now speak particularly. Let us not therefore too curiously pry into them, nor affect to be wise above that which is written.

6. Now, when these things were thus ordained, the priests went [k] always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God. 7. But into the second went the high-priest alone [l] once every year, not without blood, which he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people:

Verses 6, 7. The tabernacle being prepared, we are told what service was performed in it.

1. In the outer part of the tabernacle the ordinary priests every day officiated, burning incense, trimming the lamps, and accomplishing all the service appointed them.

2. Into the second tabernacle, within the veil, went the high-priest alone once a-year, on one day only, and then not without blood, which he offered as an atonement for himself, and for the errors of the people; intimating hereby that there was no access to God but through the blood of atonement, even the blood of him whom all the sacrifices represented, and whose intercession, on behalf of his people, could only be available.

8. The Holy Ghost this signifying, [m] that the way to the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing: 9. [n] Which was a figure for the time then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices, that could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience; 10. Which stood [o] only in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ‡ ordinances, imposed on them until [p] the time of reformation. 11. Verses 8—14. The apostle here proceeds to declare the design of the Holy Ghost in these ritual services.

1. He signified hereby, that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing: in that dark dispensation, the way of access to a throne of grace, and of admission into heaven itself through the blood and righteousness of the Redeemer, was not so clearly and fully laid open, as it should afterwards be under the gospel.

2. The tabernacle was a figure for the time then present, suited to that more obscure dispensation, and the shadow of good things to come, till he who was the substance of them should appear, and then it would become useless.

3. The gifts and sacrifices there offered could not make the worshippers perfect; but though they were available to the purifying of the flesh, and exculpated them from suffering the temporal punishments, due to them as offenders against God, considered as their political Sovereign, they could not purge the conscience from moral evil, appease the fears of guilt, or secure from eternal punishment, any farther than they led them to Christ, who was in these sacrifices prefigured, that so they might be justified by faith; for these sacrifices could little avail, standing only in meats, and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances and rites which accompanied them, and may be considered as a burden imposed on them until the time of reformation, when Christ in his gospel should free his spiritual Israel from this heavy yoke.

4. Christ hath appeared and accomplished all that was here prefigured concerning him. But Christ being come a high-priest of good things to come, on purpose to procure all spiritual and eternal blessings for his people, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, even of his own body, wherein dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building, but formed by the holy Ghost from the substance of a virgin: neither by the blood of goats or calves, which was all the Levitical priests could offer, but by a sacrifice infinitely more excellent, hath made the atonement, even by offering his own body on the tree; and with his own blood of everlasting efficacy, he entered in once into the holy place, even into heaven itself, there for ever to abide, and plead the merit of that sacrifice which he had offered, having obtained eternal redemption for us by this one oblation. For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of a heifer, sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh, and under the Mosaical economy re-admitted those who were unclean, and excluded from the public worship, to the congregation of the faithful: how much more shall the blood of Christ, the efficacy of which is so infinitely greater, who through the eternal Spirit, which dwelt in his perfectly pure human nature, offered himself without spot unto God, a lamb meet to bleed on God's altar, how shall not this, I say, much more purge your conscience from dead works, from all your sins, however great and aggravated, the wages of which must have been eternal death, and restore you to serve the living God, in all holy and willing obedience, regarding him now as your reconciled God and Father, through the Son of his love Christ Jesus? Note, (1.) The redemption which the Saviour hath obtained for his people is eternal, not merely from present sin and guilt, but includes the purchase of everlasting glory for them. (2.) The oblation which he once offered effectually accomplished this, and left nothing for them to do, but freely to come and receive the unsearchable riches of his grace. (3.) The excellence and availableness of Christ's sacrifice arise from the dignity of his person; he who offered his human nature upon the cross was very God, and that gave infinite value to the blood which he shed. (4.) Sin must eternally have destroyed all the human race but for this one oblation; nothing else could purge the sinner's conscience; but this is all-sufficient to save to the uttermost, and cleanse us from all sin. (5.) All whose consciences are purged by the blood of sprinkling, experience also the power of changing grace upon their hearts, and are thenceforward both inclined and enabled in righteousness and true holiness to serve the living God.

15. [b] And for this cause he is the mediator of the new testament, that by means of death, for the redemption [c] of the transgressions that were under the first testament, [d] they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance. 16. For where a testament is, there must also of necessity * be the death of the testator. 17. Verses 15—22. The covenant of grace is here considered under the nature of a testamentary disposition, we receiving all spiritual blessings, as the legacies left by our dying Lord.

And for this cause he is the Mediator of the new testament, securing for his people, and bequeathing to them every blessing, that by means of death, whereby the covenant was ratified, and the full atonement made, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament, the efficacy of his sacrifice reaching back to the beginning, as well as to the end of time, they which are called to faith in him, in whatever age they may have lived, might receive the promise of eternal inheritance, which is inseparably connected with faith in his atoning blood. For as among men, where a testament or will is made, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator, before the legacies bequeathed can be claimed, or paid; so it was necessary that Christ should die, for a testament is of force only after men are dead: otherwise it is of no strength at all while the testator liveth. Whereupon neither the first testament was dedicated without blood of slain beasts, which typified the death and blood-shedding of the great Redeemer. For when Moses had spoken every precept to all the people according to the law, he took the blood of calves and of goats, which had been sacrificed, with water, and scarlet wool, and hyssop, and sprinkled both the book and all the people, in token of the ratification of all that was contained in the sacred volume, and of the application of the blessings and benefits contained in the testament to the souls of the faithful; and this was figurative of that blood and water which flowed from the wounded side of the Redeemer, which, in its virtue, effectually cleanses the consciences of those who believe from all guilt and defilement. And this Moses bid them particularly to observe, Saying, This is the blood of the testament which God hath enjoined upon you whereby it is ratified, and his faithfulness engaged for the fulfilment of all the promises therein contained. Moreover, he sprinkled likewise with blood both the tabernacle, and all the vessels of the ministry, when they were made. And almost all things are by the law purged with blood, wherein the sacrifice and death of Christ were constantly held forth to them as the alone meritorious cause of the sinner's acceptance; and that without the shedding of his blood there is no remission of sins.

23. It was therefore necessary that [l] the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but [m] the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these. 24. For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are [n] the figures of the true; but [o] into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us: 25. Nor yet that he should offer himself often, [p] as the high priest entereth into the holy place every year with blood of others; 26. For then must he often have suffered since the foundation of the world: [q] but now once in the end of the world hath he appeared, to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. 27. [r] And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but [s] after this the judgment: 28. So [t] Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him [u] shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation.

Verses 23—28. From what he had advanced, the apostle argues,

That it was therefore necessary, by divine appointment, that the patterns of things in the heavens, the tabernacle and all the vessels, should be purified with these typical sacrifices and sprinklings of blood; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these, even the offering of Jesus himself, who by his own blood ratified the covenant of grace, and being through his sacrifice consecrated to his office as the great high-priest, entered into heaven, there to present his blood before the throne, and prepare mansions for the reception of his people. For Christ is not, like the Jewish high-priests, entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us, and effectually to insure to us all the blessings which, by his blood-shedding, he hath purchased: nor was his sacrifice incomplete, as yet again to require that he should offer himself often, as the high-priest entereth into the holy place every year with the blood of others, of the animals which were sacrificed: (for then must he often have suffered since the foundation of the world,) and the fall of man; but now once in the end of the world, at the close of the Jewish economy, and at the beginning of the last and most excellent dispensation, under the gospel, hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself, suffering in the human nature, and by the divine glory of his person, offering such a complete and all-availing sacrifice as never needed a repetition, the efficacy thereof extending to every believer to the latest ages of time. And as it is appointed unto men once to die, returning to the dust from whence they came, and but once, for after this bodily death is the final judgment, when all must appear at God's bar, and stand or fall to eternity: so Christ was once offered upon the cross to bear the sins of many, and made there a full atonement by his one oblation; and unto them that look for him, in faith and love, expecting his return, shall he appear, not as a suffering but a glorified Saviour, without sin, having taken it all away, and being now manifested to bring his people unto that complete and perfect salvation in glory, which he hath obtained for them. Note, (1.) Die we must, such is the divine decree; highly therefore doth it import us to prepare for this awful change. (2.) Judgment follows close at the heels of death, and as the tree falleth, it must lie for ever. (3.) Christ hath borne the sins of many, not of every individual of the human species, but of the many sons whom he is appointed to bring unto glory. (4.) He that suffered upon a cross shall shortly appear upon the throne, and a terrible Judge will he be found to those who have not embraced him as a Saviour. (5.) It is the character of his redeemed people that they look for the day of his appearing, earnestly expecting his arrival, that they may obtain their perfect consummation both in body and soul, in his kingdom of everlasting glory.

CHAP. X.—ANNO DOMINI, 64.

To wean the Hebrews from the Levitical dispensation, he proceeds in this chapter, 1. To lay low the whole of that priesthood and service, ver. 1—6. 2. He raises and exalts the priesthood of Christ very high, that he might effectually recommend him and his gospel to them, ver. 7—18. 3. He shows to believers the honours and dignities of their state, and calls them to suitable duties, ver. 19. to the end.

Verses 1—18. The weakness and unprofitableness of the Levitical institutions should engage the Hebrews to receive, with greater cordiality, the blessed gospel. For,

1. The law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, all being figurative and typical of Christ, who should, in the fulness of time, appear as the substance, can never by those sacrifices which they, who were high-priests, offered from year to year continually, make the comers thereunto perfect, so as to satisfy God's justice, obtain reconciliation, and pacify the guilty conscience. For then, if this great end had been fully answered, would they not have ceased to be offered? What use would there have been for the repetition? because that the worshippers once purged should have had no more conscience of sins, not have been under any farther condemnation or distress of soul. But in those sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of sins every year, which shows that the former sacrifices had not perfectly atoned for them. Nor indeed could they, for it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins, making an adequate compensation to Divine Justice, or that the death of a beast should be a proper and effectual atonement for the sin of the soul. A better sacrifice than these was required, and all the use of these typical ones was to lead them to Christ, whose blood alone could satisfy for sin. Wherefore,

2. When he cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not, but a body hast thou prepared me, in which to make that atonement for which the legal sacrifices were ineffectual. In burnt-offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure. Then, said I, Lo, I come (as in the volume of the book of prophecy it is written of me) to do thy will, O God; well pleased and content to suffer all that justice demands to make satisfaction for the sins of my people. Above when he said, Sacrifice, and offering, and burnt-offerings, and offering for sin thou wouldest not, neither hadst pleasure therein, (which are offered by the law;) then, said he, Lo, I come to do thy will, O God, and to take away sin by the sacrifice of myself. He taketh away the first covenant, with all the legal sacrifices, because of their insufficiency, that he may establish the second, through his own all-atoning blood.

3. In virtue of his oblation the most invaluable blessings are secured to us. By the which will of God, as fulfilled in Christ, we are sanctified, our sins expiated, and our consciences purged from their defilement, through the offering of the body of Jesus once for all; wherein may be observed another singular excellence of our High-priest and his sacrifice above all others; for every priest STANDETH, with awful distance, and continues DAILY ministering, and offering OFTENTIMES THE SAME SACRIFICES, all which things showed the imperfection of that dispensation; and, after all, these can never take away sin, so as to satisfy God's justice, or relieve the guilty conscience; but this man, the glorious Jesus, after he had offered ONE sacrifice for sins, fully accomplished his work, and never needed to offer another, and for ever SAT DOWN, in a state of endless rest and most transcendent dignity, on the right hand of God; from henceforth expecting till all his enemies be made his footstool, and Satan, sin, the world, and death, shall at last be destroyed for ever. For by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified; in his blood and righteousness they stand complete before God, are regarded by him as without spot, and through the powerful efficacy of divine faith, their hearts are renewed and dedicated to God. Wherefore the Holy Ghost also is a witness to us: for after that he had said before, This is the covenant that I will make with them after those days, saith the Lord, I will put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them; and their sins and iniquities will I remember no more; so that they shall be absolutely, fully, and for ever done away. Now, where remission of these is, in so complete a manner, there is no more offering for sin, the one oblation of Christ's body on the cross having satisfied to the uttermost. Note, (1.) All God's people are sanctified, as well as justified, by the offering of the body of Jesus once for all; thereby all grace, as well as pardon, was purchased for them. (2.) In Christ we are perfected for ever, and our title to glory was as complete when he died on the tree as when we shall appear before his throne. (3.) The absolute and everlasting pardon of sin is one of the peculiar blessings of the covenant of grace. (4.) All the enemies of Christ and his people must sooner or later become his footstool: he is sat down on his throne, and shall reign till they are utterly destroyed.

[b] Acts 20. 42. 1 Cor. 11. 20. Jude 19. 2 Pet. 3. 9, 11, 14. 1 Pet. 4. 7. ch. 3. 13. Rom. 13. 11—14.

Verses 19—25. The apostle having concluded the doctrinal part of the epistle, proceeds to make a practical improvement of the whole.

He reminds them of the inestimable privileges which through their great High-priest they enjoyed. Having, therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest, and freedom and confidence in approaching a reconciled God, by the blood of Jesus, sprinkled with which we are assured of present and eternal acceptance before him; by a new and living way which he hath consecrated, who is himself, the way, the truth, and the life; and they who walk in him shall never die; and this through the veil, that is to say, his flesh; for, when his body was broken on the tree, the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom, to show, that every obstruction in our way to a throne of grace and glory was now removed: and having a High-priest, one so great and glorious, over the house of God, let us,

1. Draw near to God in every act of worship, and in the most endeared communion; with a true heart, in all simplicity and godly sincerity; and in full assurance of faith in the all-sufficiency of our Redeemer, and our reconciliation with God through him; having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, with his atoning blood, which speaks peace from all guilt and condemnation; and our bodies washed with pure water, cleansed by the powerful operations of the Holy Ghost, which the Jewish washings prefigured.

2. Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; not seduced by temptation, dismayed with opposition, or distrusting the grace engaged for our support; for he is faithful that promised, and we may safely repose on his word our everlasting all.

And, 3. Let us consider one another, our respective trials, dangers, wants, and weakness, in order to provoke each other unto love towards Jesus and the brethren, and to good works, such as may adorn our high profession.

4. Let us be united in heart and worship, not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is, who, on weak and frivolous pretences, absent from the congregation of the faithful and the communion of the Lord; a sad symptom of declension, and often the prelude to apostasy.

5. Let us never be slack and remiss in holy jealousy over ourselves and our brethren; but be exhorting one another to give all diligence to make our calling and election sure, in the use of every appointed means of grace; and so much the more as ye see the day approaching, when the whole Jewish polity and nation shall be destroyed; or when death must place you before the judgment-seat of Christ. An awful consideration! which, the more deeply it dwells upon our minds, will excite our most awakened solicitude to be always ready for our great change.

26. For [c] if we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, 27. [d] But a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries. 28. [e] He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses: 29. [f] Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the [g] blood of the covenant, wherewith [h] he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace? 30. For we know him that hath said, [i] Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense, saith the Lord. And again, [k] The Lord shall judge his people. 31. [l] It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.

Verses 26—31. To awaken their more abundant concern, the apostle sets before them the dreadful evil and danger of apostasy.

For if we sin wilfully, after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, which doth not mean every sin that through infirmity or temptation we may be drawn into, nor even deliberate or repeated acts of sin; but such a course of iniquity, embraced with full consent of the mind, as leads to an utter rejection of the gospel, and denial of Jesus Christ: in which case the only remedy being rejected, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, nor any possibility of pardon, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries, such as shortly must seize the infidel Jews, when they shall be buried in the ruins of their city, and awaits the finally impenitent in the great day of God's wrath, when the wicked shall be cast into hell, where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched. Even he that despised Moses' law died without mercy, under two or three witnesses, and no sacrifice was appointed for presumptuous sins: of how much sorer punishment then, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, whose offence is so infinitely more aggravated, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, treating him with the direst insolence and contempt as an impostor, denying his deity, despising his atonement and righteousness, and mocking at his grace; and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, of less efficacy than the blood of bulls and goats, yea, as the Jews intimated at his crucifixion, viler than that of the greatest miscreants: and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace, imputing his miracles to diabolical power, and calling his operations upon the hearts of men delusion and enthusiasm. Such blasphemy is unpardonable, and must bring down the heaviest wrath of an offended God. For we know him that hath said, Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense, saith the Lord, and punish incorrigible offenders according to their wickedness. And again, The Lord shall judge his people, will detect the hypocrites, and as surely destroy the apostate as he will save the faithful. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God, whose wrath, if it be kindled, yea, but a moment, who may abide it? Let us hear and tremble, and watch and pray, that we come not into this condemnation, and perish with these despisers.

Verses 32—39. To excite the faithful steadily to persevere,

1. He reminds them of the past sufferings which they had so nobly undergone. But call to remembrance the former days, in which, after ye were illuminated, and brought to the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus, ye endured a great fight of afflictions, and quitted yourselves manfully, as became those who were listed under the banner of the cross; partly whilst ye were made a gazingstock, both by reproaches and afflictions, pointed at, treated as despicable and ridiculous, and as criminals exposed in the theatres to wild beasts, worried with the unrelenting malice and enmity of the wicked world; and partly whilst ye became companions of them that were so used, nobly owning them in their sufferings for righteousness' sake, sympathizing with them, and affording them every assistance. For ye had compassion of me in my bonds, tenderly affected for me, and supporting me to the utmost of your ability; and took joyfully the spoiling of your goods, content, yea, glorying in your sufferings and losses, knowing in yourselves, from the fullest assurance of God's promises and the experience of his grace, that you have in heaven a better and an enduring substance, which none can take from you. Note, (1.) Every Christian must expect and welcome the cross. (2.) Though we may be screened by Divine Providence and human laws from grosser violations of our property, the lash of slander, the bitterness of reproach, and the trial of cruel mockings, these we shall assuredly meet if we belong to Christ. (3.) God can make his people joyful under all their trials, and neither ashamed nor afraid to suffer for his sake. (4.) If we are of the body of Christ, none of his members suffer with whom we do not sympathize, and we shall own and honour them under their reproaches for his name's sake. (5.) If we gain heaven at last, we need be little concerned what we may lose by the way.

2. He exhorts them to stand fast in the prospect of the glory which was before them. Cast not away therefore your confidence, boldness and holy resolution, which hath great recompense of reward, and will secure for you a crown of glory which fadeth not away, and that will infinitely overbalance all your losses and sufferings. For ye have need of patience, whilst the conflict continues, that ye may not be weary and faint in your mind; and that after ye have done the will of God, faithfully obedient to his word, and resigned to his providence, ye might receive the promise of the eternal inheritance. For yet a little while, a very short moment, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry, to execute vengeance upon his enemies, to vindicate the injuries of his people, and save them with his uttermost salvation. Note, (1.) Faith and patience, held fast, secure our perseverance. (2.) Whatever trials oppress us, it is our comfort that the Judge standeth at the door, and that death shall quickly release us from every burden.

3. He encourages and warns them alternately. Now the just shall live by faith, or the just by faith shall live, in spite of every effort of sin, the world, and Satan, to destroy the life of God in their souls; yea, they shall live with him in eternity; but if any man draw back from Christ and his gospel as apostates, my soul, saith God, shall have no pleasure in him, but, contrariwise, he will be the object of my abhorrence, and suffer all my furious indignation. But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition, such confidence have I toward you; but of them that truly believe to the saving of the soul, faithful unto death, that we may receive the crown of life. Note, (1.) Many go far in profession, who after all prove apostates. (2.) They who have true faith will never draw back unto perdition. (3.) Past experience of God's keeping us should encourage our increasing confidence in his grace. He will never leave nor forsake us, and then shall we never leave nor forsake him.

CHAP. XI.—ANNO DOMINI, 64.

The apostle having, in the close of the foregoing chapter, recommended the grace of faith and a life of faith as the best preservative against apostasy; he now enlarges upon the nature and fruits of this excellent grace. 1. The nature of it, and the honour it reflects upon all that live in the exercise of it, ver. 1—3. 2. The great examples we have in the Old Testament of those that lived by faith, and did and suffered extraordinary things by the strength of this grace, ver. 4—39. And, 3. The advantages that we have in the gospel for the exercise of this grace above what they had that lived in the times of the Old Testament, ver. 39, 40.

1. NOW [a] faith is the * substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. 2. [b] For by it the elders obtained a good report. 3. Through faith we understand that [c] the worlds were framed by the word of God; so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear.

Verses 1—3. We have here,

1. An account of the nature and effects of divine faith. Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, giving such a realizing view of the promises, and such a subsistence of them to the mind, as if they were actually in our possession; and the evidence of things not seen, demonstrating as assuredly the certainty of the invisible things revealed in the divine word, as a mathematical proposition, when solved, carries the clearest conviction along with it.

2. All the saints from the beginning have lived under its blessed influence: For by it the elders obtained a good report, and were enabled so to walk as to obtain God's approbation of their conduct. This from the first being the divine principle on which alone any work acceptable to God could ever be performed.

3. One of the first articles of faith is this, That the worlds were framed by the word of God, who from nothing spoke them into being; so that the things which are seen, even all the visible objects of creation, were not made of things which do appear, from any pre-existent matter, but from that chaotic mass, which was produced at the word of the Almighty.

4. By faith [d] Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts: and by it he being dead † yet speaketh. 5. By faith [e] Enoch was translated that he should not see death; and was not found, because God had translated him: for before his translation he had this testimony, that he pleased God. 6. [f] But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. 7. By faith Noe, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, ‡ moved with fear, [g] prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world, and [h] became heir of the righteousness which is by faith.

Verses 4—7. The apostle here begins to instance the power of divine faith in many of the eminent servants of God, and he begins with the antediluvian worthies.

1. Abel. By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, who only brought of the fruit of the ground, but offered no atoning sacrifice in acknowledgment of his sin, whilst Abel to his mincha, or meat-offering, added the blood of the firstlings of his flock, the type of the great atonement whereon his faith rested; by which he obtained witness of God that he was righteous, either by some visible token, as fire from heaven on his sacrifice, or by the witness of the Spirit in his heart; God testifying of his works, that they were accepted through the righteousness of faith; and by it, he, being dead, yet speaketh; the record of it in the scripture instructs us, that, since the fall of man, the only way of access to God is through the atoning sacrifice of Jesus: and also that vengeance awaits the murderer and persecutor, against whom the blood of innocence and the cries of oppression cry for judgment. Note, (1.) The only access to God for sinners from the beginning was through the blood of Jesus. (2.) There is a great difference between those who worship God in formality, and faith. It is not the act, but the way in which we present our prayers, which makes the acceptable offering. (3.) They who are righteous by faith, and have obtained witness from God, may expect the world's enmity. The first most eminent saint recorded in scripture was a martyr for religion.

2. Enoch. By faith Enoch was translated, that he should not see death, caught up to the paradise of God in body and soul, and instantly undergoing the change that fitted him for an eternal mansion in glory; and was not found, because God had translated him: for before his translation to the realms of bliss, he had this testimony, that he pleased God, in a course of humble and holy walking, under the influence of divine faith in the expected seed of the woman; see Jude 14, 15. But without faith in him it is impossible to please God: for he that cometh to God, in any act of religious worship, must believe that he is such as he hath revealed himself to the sons of men, who never could have known either his being or attributes but by revelation; and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him, in the use of all the ordinances which he hath appointed. Note, (1.) No service can please God, but what springs from faith as its origin. (2.) God is the portion and exceeding great reward of all his people. (3.) There are appointed means, in which, God hath told us, they who wait upon him shall assuredly obtain his blessing; and in the use of them we cannot be too diligent.

3. Noah. By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, which reason could never have suggested, nor mortal know but by divine revelation, moved with fear and religious awe at the apprehension of the approaching judgments, prepared an ark according to God's direction, in defiance of the scoffs of the men of that generation, to the saving of his house from the approaching deluge; by the which he condemned the world; his preaching and labours in building the ark witnessed against that unbelieving world, who paid no regard to his works or word during the space of a hundred and twenty years, and thus left them without excuse; whilst he himself became hereby heir of the righteousness which is by faith, entitled to the complete salvation which the righteousness of that Redeemer in the fulness of time should purchase, whom the ark represented, and he by faith apprehended. Note, (1.) God sends his warnings before his judgments: the latter come not till the former have been despised. (2.) Faith begets holy fear, silences all objections, and sets us to work for God in defiance of all opposition. (3.) They who will ever be saved from the deluge of wrath, must by faith take shelter in Christ their ark, for out of him there is no hope.

8. By faith [i] Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went. 9. By faith he [k] sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise: 10. For he looked for [l] a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. 11. Through faith also [m] Sara herself received strength to conceive seed, and was delivered of a child when she was past age, because she judged him faithful who had promised. 12. [n] Therefore sprang there even of one, and him as good as dead, so many as the stars of the sky in multitude, and as the sand which is by the sea-shore innumerable. 13. [o] These all died ‖ in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and [p] confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth. 14. For they that say such things declare plainly that they [q] seek a country. 15. And truly, if they had been mindful of [r] that country from whence they came out, [s] they might have had opportunity to have returned. 16. But now [t] they desire a better country, that is, an heavenly: wherefore [u] God is not ashamed to be called their God;

Verses 8—19. From the antediluvian patriarchs the apostle passes on to consider the case of the great father of the faithful, an example that should have peculiar weight with those who valued themselves on being his descendants.

1. He mentions Abraham's call. By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out from the land of his nativity into a place which he should afterwards receive for an inheritance, obeyed without hesitation, fully persuaded of the truth, power, and grace of God to fulfil his promises; and he went out, under divine guidance, and trusting on divine direction, not knowing whither he went, neither the country itself, not the way which led to it. Note, (1.) Implicit faith is due to God's word; and though we know not how, yet we may be assured, however improbable it may appear to sense and reason, it shall be fulfilled in the appointed season. (2.) They who would go to the heavenly Canaan, must, at God's call, come forth out of a world that lieth in wickedness. (3.) The inheritance of glory is secured to the faithful, and whatever difficulties are in the way, they shall possess it at last.

2. His sojourning in Canaan. By faith he sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, though proprietor of it by the divine grant, yet not holding the least part in possession; dwelling in tabernacles, without any settled abode, with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise, Jacob being fifteen years old at Abraham's death. For he looked for a city which hath foundations, even the state of eternal glory above, which is represented as a city, Rev. xxii. 14. whose builder and maker is God, he having prepared the heavenly mansions for his chosen. Note, (1.) The saints of God are here resident in tabernacles of clay, but mansions of glory await them in a better world. (2.) Faith, which realizes our hopes above, necessarily draws forth our affections and desires after that blessed world to which we go. (3.) All the trials of this mortal state will be regarded by us as light and transient, when we abidingly keep in view the far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

3. The faith of Sarah is observed as closely connected with that of her husband Abraham. Through faith also Sarah herself, though naturally barren, and now past the time of childbearing, received strength to conceive seed, and was delivered of a child when she was past age, being ninety years old; because, notwithstanding she at first hesitated and laughed, as if the thing was impossible, yet her faith soon got the better of her unbelief; for she judged him faithful who had promised, and that he was able to perform what he had said. Therefore sprang there even of one, and him as good as dead through old age, so many as the stars of the sky in multitude, and as the sand which is by the sea-shore innumerable. Note, Nothing is impossible with God: when he promises, we may trust, and not be afraid.

4. These all, Abraham, Sarah, Isaac, and Jacob, died in faith, not having received the promises, neither possessing the land of Canaan, nor having seen the Messiah incarnate; but, in the fullest assurance that what God had spoken was as good as done, and sure in the event, having seen them afar off, looking forward to the distant ages when the time of their accomplishment should arrive; and were as fully persuaded of them as if they had lived to see them fulfilled, and embraced them with confidence and holy joy; and, under the influence of them, confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth, regarding themselves as such, looking for their heavenly home, and living above the world on the glorious hopes which God through Christ had given unto them. For they that say such things, and professedly and practically die unto the world, declare plainly that they seek a country, and look to a better world as their native land. And truly if they had been mindful of that country from whence they came out, they might have had opportunity to have returned to Ur of the Chaldees again; but now they desire a better country, that is, a heavenly, even that inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, which God in Christ, as their covenant God, had revealed unto them, and which they by faith embraced. Wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God, in a peculiar and most endeared relation; for he hath prepared for them a city, a glorious abode with himself, eternal in the heavens. Note, (1.) In this world we live by faith, not by sight; and yet the certain approach of the promised inheritance can even here, as if possessed, fill us with joy and peace in believing. (2.) True faith hath ever this effect, to make us overcome the world, and live as strangers and pilgrims on the earth; we place not our affections upon it, but pass through it as a foreign land, with a holy indifference about its gains, honours, or interests; contentedly put up with any accommodations which we meet with, hasten on with diligence towards our native home, consort with our own countrymen who are travelling the same road and speak the same language, and are happy the nearer we arrive to that land where our affections are placed, and whither our footsteps bend. (3.) None that are truly converted to God from the kingdom of darkness and sin, ever think of returning thither again; but whatever difficulties are in the way, or whatever temptation solicit, they steadfastly cleave to Christ as their portion, and follow him in their regeneration. (4.) The heavenly country may well be the object of the believer's desires, when every thing there is so infinitely preferable to what can ever be found in this miserable world. (5.) They who live in faith will die in faith; that which carries them victorious through the conflicts of life will make them triumphant over the terrors of death. (6.) If God be our God, therein is comprehended all possible blessedness; more heart cannot desire, nor imagination conceive.

5. The apostle returns to mention another and the most eminent instance of Abraham's faith. By faith Abraham, when he was tried, as never mortal was before, to prove the strength and truth of his faith and obedience, offered up Isaac, took every step which evidenced his intention fully to comply with the divine command, (see Gen. xxii.) and he that had received the promises offered up his only begotten son, in whom alone the promises were to have been fulfilled: of whom it was said, that in Isaac shall thy seed be called; amidst innumerable objections, which sense, reason, nature, yea, even religion, might seem to suggest, he staggered not; looking to the uplifted knife, we still shudder with horror and distress; and what must he then feel that stands ready to plunge it in that dear sacrifice, thy son, thy only son, Isaac, whom thou lovest! We start from the scene; but Abraham, herein more than human, dares obey; his faith triumphed over every suggestion, accounting, (λογισαμενος) reasoning and concluding, from the most substantial grounds of evidence, that God, by whose command he knew with the most infallible assurance that he now acted, was able to raise him up even from the dead, from whence he also received him in a figure; he knew that God could as easily re-animate Isaac on the altar as produce him from the bodies of his parents, that were, for the purposes of his generation, as good as dead; and that the divine promise should somehow receive its accomplishment, he rested in the fullest confidence. Note, (1.) God knows the purposes that are in the hearts of his people; and what they design in obedience to his will he regards as acts really performed. (2.) Where God commands, we must stop our ears to all the reasoning of unbelief, fear, and selfishness. Duty is ours; events are at his disposal. (3.) Isaac was the figure and type of the death and resurrection of Christ. (4.) We marvel at Abraham's obedience to God's command, though his son is spared; with what astonishment and wonder then should we contemplate the love of God, who spared NOT his own Son, but even for us sinners gave him up to death, even the death of the cross!

20. By faith [b] Isaac blessed Jacob and Esau concerning things to come. 21. By faith Jacob, when he was a dying, [c] blessed both the sons of Joseph; and worshipped, leaning upon the top of his staff. 22. By faith [d] Joseph, when he died, † made mention of the departing of the children of Israel; and gave commandment concerning his bones. 23. By faith [e] Moses, when he was born, was hid three months of his parents, because they saw he was a proper child; and they were [f] not afraid of the king's commandment. 24. By faith [g] Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; 25. [h] Choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; 26. Esteeming the reproach [i] of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt: [k] for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward. 27. [l] By faith he forsook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king: for he endured as seeing him who is invisible. 28. Through faith [m] he kept the passover, and the sprinkling of blood, lest he that destroyed the first-born should touch them. 29. By faith [n] they passed through the Red sea as by dry land; which the Egyptians assaying to do were drowned. 30. By faith [o] the walls of Jericho fell down, after they were compassed about seven days. 31. By faith [p] the harlot Rahab perished not with them ‖ that believed not, when she had received the spies with peace.

Verses 20—31. The apostle proceeds to other eminent instances of faith.

1. Isaac. He had been mentioned before; another instance of his faith is here given, when, in confidence of the promise, he left his parting benediction with his children, and by divine determination, though undesignedly, being blind, conveyed the principal blessing to his younger son. By faith Isaac blessed Jacob and Esau, concerning things to come; to Esau he gave the fatness of the earth, but to Jacob the mercies of a covenant God.

2. Jacob. By faith, in the promises of God to Abraham, Jacob when he was a dying, blessed both the sons of Joseph, by a prophetic spirit foretelling the superior greatness of Ephraim, and crossing his hands designedly, that his right hand might rest on the head of the youngest: and worshipped God, leaning upon the top of his staff. Note, (1.) The worship of God will be the believer's exercise to the last: when old age and weakness will not permit him to bend his knees, he will still bow upon his bed, or lean upon his staff, and pour out his humble prayer. (2.) Parents cannot more properly finish their course than by leaving with their children that surround their dying beds, the profession of their faith, and their final benediction.

3. Joseph. By faith Joseph, when he died, firmly persuaded of that inheritance in Canaan which was assigned to Abraham and his seed, made mention of the departing of the children of Israel out of Egypt, and gave commandment concerning his bones, solemnly charging them, under the sanction of an oath, that, when in the expected future day they departed to possess the promised land, his bones might be carried thither. The dust of Canaan was more eligible in his eyes than the noblest sepulchres of Egypt. Note, The testimony of dying saints to the truth of God's promises is a happy means to confirm the faith of their surviving brethren.

4. The parents of Moses. By faith Moses, when he was born, ordained to be the great lawgiver and deliverer of Israel, and a most eminent type of Jesus their spiritual Redeemer, was hid three months of his parents, because they saw he was a proper child, fair to God, eminently beautiful, and probably some divine tokens appeared of his future greatness; and they were not afraid of the king's commandment, though, if discovered, their lives had paid for their disobedience to his bloody edict. They were persuaded that, by a Hebrew, God would work their deliverance; and, probably by some divine intimation perceived this child should be the person. Note, (1.) When parents are eminent for their faith, there is a happy prospect that their children will rise up heirs of the same grace. (2.) In days of suffering we may lawfully use every prudent means for our preservation. (3.) An ingenuous countenance often bespeaks the ingenious mind.

5. Moses. Much is spoken of him; for he is famous among the worthies, and hath his name in the first rank. Three eminent instances of his faith are here recorded.

(1.) By faith in the promises made to his ancestors, and of the blessings, in a better world, Moses, when he was come to years, arrived at maturity, highly honoured, and eminent for wisdom and learning, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, with all the dignities and advantages thence arising, perhaps even of succeeding to the throne of Egypt; choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, as a despised Hebrew, than to enjoy all the glories of the highest human grandeur, and the pleasures of sin, however alluring, which are but for a season, and must in their issue plunge both body and soul into eternal misery: esteeming the reproach of Christ, and all the contempt, scorn, and persecutions, which for the sake of their fidelity to his worship, and faith in his promises, Israel endured, greater riches than the treasures in Egypt, and what in the issue would prove unspeakably his gain in the eternal world; for he had respect unto the recompense of reward, and looked off from the tempting objects of a flattering but deceitful world, to the substantial portion which he expected in the enjoyment of God for ever and ever. Note, (1.) Faith appears then most gloriously triumphant over the world, when in the midst of greatness and grandeur, the soul can look down on those trifles, and be ready to part with all for the sake of Christ and his cause. (2.) The pleasures of sin, of the sweetest sins, are momentary; but the punishment of them is eternal. They judge therefore as wisely as religiously, who live in holy self-denial. (3.) As the greatest advantages cannot pay us for the least sin, so are the greatest sufferings to be chosen rather than offend God; and we shall never see cause to regret what we forego or endure for our fidelity to him. (4.) The reproach of Christ is our truest honour; far from being ashamed of it, we should glory therein as our greatest riches. (5.) There is a recompense of reward, the prospect of which should ever animate our soul, and teach us to count every thing beside dung and dross, so that we may but gain the glorious prize.

(2.) By faith he forsook Egypt, carrying up with him the children of Israel, confident of the Lord's protection, and not fearing the wrath of the enraged king, nor the mighty hosts with which he pursued them in their way; for he endured, undismayed and unshaken, as seeing him who is invisible, higher than the kings of the earth, and able to save to the uttermost. Note, (1.) They who will be faithful to God must expect troubles, and be fearless of the wrath of men. (2.) A believing view of the invisible God will strengthen us, amidst all present difficulties, steadily to persevere.

(3.) Through faith in God's deliverance of his people from Egypt, and of the greater redemption which should be obtained for Israel by the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, he kept the passover, and observed the peculiar rite then enjoined, of the sprinkling of the blood on the door-post of their houses, lest he that destroyed the first born of the Egyptians should touch them, if the blood prevented not his entrance. Note, (1.) Christ is our passover. His blood upon our consciences is our only protection from the wrath of God. (2.) If we are spared when others perish, we must acknowledge it to be an act of sovereign grace to us, and own ourselves entirely indebted for it to our adored Redeemer.

(4.) By faith, in the power and promise of God, Moses stretched forth his rod, and the divided waters opened a passage for the discouraged hosts of Israel; and under his guidance, while he led the way, they passed through the Red sea as by dry land; which the Egyptians daringly assaying to do, were drowned, the waters closing upon them, and every man of that terrible host perished. Note, They who persecute God's Israel, only rush upon their own ruin.

6. By faith, which Joshua, Caleb, and others exercised in God's power and veracity, the walls of Jericho fell down of their own accord, when they blew and shouted, after they were compassed about seven days, according to the divine command. Note, (1.) When God is for us, all opposition must fall before us. (2.) The weakest means in his hands are sufficient to bring about the greatest events.

7. Rahab, a woman, a Canaanite, brings up the rear of faithful worthies. By faith in the promise that God would assuredly give the land of Canaan to the Israelites, the harlot Rahab, who before had been a woman of infamous character, but now turned unto God, whose grace abounds toward the chief of sinners, perished not with them that believed not of the Canaanites; but with her whole family was preserved, when she had given that real proof of her faith, in that she received, concealed and dismissed the spies of Israel in peace. Note, (1.) The ruin of sinners is their unbelief. (2.) They who cleave to God's people, and faithfully determine to share their weal and woe, will never have reason to repent their choice.

32. And what shall I more say? for the time would fail me to tell of [q] Gideon, and of [r] Barak, and of [s] Samson, and of [t] Jephthah, of [u] David also, and [x] Samuel, and of the prophets: 33. Who through faith [y] subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, [z] stopped the mouths of lions, 34. [a] Quenched the violence of fire, [b] escaped the edge of the sword, [c] out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens. 35. [d] Women received their dead raised to life again: and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection: 36. [e] And others had trial of cruel mockings and [f] scourgings, yea, moreover, of bonds and imprisonment: 37. [f] They were stoned, [g] they were sawn asunder, were tempted, [g] were slain with the sword: [h] they wandered about in sheep skins, and goat skins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented; 38. [i] (Of whom the world was not worthy:) [k] they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth. 39. And these all, [l] having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise; 40. [m] God having * provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect.

* Or foreseen.

Verses 32—40. Unable to enter particularly into the case of every eminent believer recorded in the Old Testament, the apostle recites a cluster of distinguished names, and of the mighty effects which their faith produced.

1. He recites some of their distinguished names. And what shall I more say? when the field is so vast, for the time would fail me, if I enlarged on every individual, to tell of Gideon and his noble exploits, recorded, (Judges vi, vii, viii.) and of Barak, who before him was alike eminent for his faith and victory, (Judges iv.) and of Samson, in life and death so signally remarkable, (Judges xiv. 19. xvi. 27—30.) and of Jephthah, before whose faith the routed Ammonites fell, (Judges xi. 23—33.) and of David also, the man after God's own heart, so famous in sacred history for dependence on God, (2 Sam. xxiii. 1—5.) and Samuel, and of the prophets, who did and suffered so nobly in the cause of God and truth, under the mighty influence of divine faith.

2. He mentions many of the glorious acts of faith, which these, and other worthies like them showed; and any one conversant in the book of God may apply them to several of the saints there recorded: Who, (1.) through faith subdued kingdoms, as Joshua, David, &c. (2.) Wrought righteousness in their private and public capacities, governing with equity, and in their conversation were examples of every thing good and gracious; (3.) Obtained promises, God remarkably appearing for them, as he had assured them he would in the hour of trial; (4.) Stopped the mouths of lions, as David, Samson, Daniel: and still the same faith will produce the same effects, in stopping the mouth of the old lion, that he cannot devour; (5.) Quenched the violence of fire, so as to remain unhurt in the midst of the flames, (Dan. iii. 13—27.) (6.) Escaped the edge of the sword, when in the most imminent danger of their lives; (7.) Out of weakness were made strong, their national affairs restored from the nearest prospect of ruin; their bodily health recovered when their disease seemed desperate, (2 Kings xx. 17.) and though, in comparison with their foes, weak as infancy, yet, in divine strength, became more than conquerors; (8.) Waxed valiant in fight, and trusting in the Lord, marvellously overcame in the day of battle; (9.) Turned to flight the armies of the aliens, though more, and, to human view, incomparably mightier than they. (10.) Women received their dead raised to life again; as in the cases of the widow of Zarephath and the Shunammite; And, with respect to the power of faith, as evident in the most acute sufferings, we read that, (11.) Others were tortured, willingly submitting to the most dreadful torments, not accepting deliverance, when only to be obtained at the price of their conscience, and some base compliances, rather welcoming death itself than deny the faith, that they might obtain a better resurrection, the prospect of eternal glory raising them superior to all the pangs of nature, and all the terrors of death. (12.) And others had trial of cruel mockings, ridiculed, treated as despicable, and loaded with every opprobrious name, and withal smarted under severe scourgings, yea, moreover, endured the pain and shame of bonds and imprisonment: such hath been the saints' portion, more or less, in every age. (13.) They were murdered in a variety of ways: They were some of them stoned, they were sawn asunder as the Jewish tradition affirms Isaiah was, at the command of the cruel Manasseh; they were tempted to deny their profession and save their lives, by complying with the commands of their persecutors; they were slain with the sword of tyrants and blood-thirsty men, and where some escaped the fury of their foes by flight, their life was embittered and scarce preferable to death itself; for, (14.) They wandered about in sheep-skins and goat-skins, having no better covering to protect them from the inclemency of the skies, being destitute of any abode, of clothes and necessary food, afflicted with various miseries, and tormented with endless insults and abuses, (of whom indeed the world was not worthy,) nor deserved so great blessing as their examples, prayers, and admonitions; and by the wicked they were treated as unfit for human society, and driven out from among men to dreary solitudes; they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth, seeking refuge among wild beasts, more hospitable than their savage persecutors; and, in the midst of all their sufferings, faith enabled them to persevere, and brought them at last to their eternal rest. For,

3. Their faith was at last crowned with the enjoyment of that Redeemer in whom they trusted. These all having obtained a good report through faith, enrolled in the sacred records as names held up for imitation to the latest ages, received not the promise, saw not that Messiah incarnate in whom their faith centred: God having provided some better thing for us, the manifestation of his son in the flesh, to whom they had constantly respect, that they without us should not be made perfect; since not by any legal sacrifices, but by the offering of the body of Jesus, both their sins and ours were expiated, and that by the same grace revealed in him we might be saved even as they. According, therefore, to the peculiar advantages which we enjoy under the gospel dispensation, a peculiar obligation is laid upon us, that our faith should be suitably operative, engaging us to all cheerful obedience, and willing sufferers for our Redeemer's sake.

CHAP. XII.—ANNO DOMINI, 64.

The apostle, in this chapter, applies what he has collected in the chapter foregoing, and makes use of it as a great motive to patience and perseverance in the Christian faith and state, pressing home the argument, 1. From a greater example than he had yet mentioned, and that is Christ himself, ver. 1—3. 2. From the gentle and gracious nature of the afflictions they endured in their Christian course, ver. 4—17. 3. From the communion and conformity between the state of the gospel church on earth, and the triumphant church in heaven, from ver. 18. to the end of the chapter.

Verses 1—3. Having proposed to them such bright examples, the apostle urges the Hebrews,

1. To imitate their faith, patience, and perseverance. Wherefore, seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, who, having finished the glorious course themselves, are now looking on our conduct, let us, animated by their examples, and roused to imitation of their excellences, lay aside every weight that would retard our speed, all inordinate attachment to earth and earthly things, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, that which from our circumstances, station in life, connections, and constitution, is ever soliciting our consent, and would insnare our souls: particularly the great and capital sins of unbelief, pride, and lust, under whatever specious pretences they may appear; and let us run with patience, not discouraged at difficulties, nor fainting under temptation, but eager to finish the race that is set before us, and to win the glorious prize. Note, (1.) We have a race before us; the course is circumscribed by our mortal days: the word of God marks out our path; saints and angels are spectators: death is the goal, and glory the reward of fidelity. What services then can we refuse? What sufferings shall dismay us? (2.) Faith and patience are the mighty graces which can enable us to hold on, and to hold out, till we finish our course with joy.

2. The only way that in faith and patience we can persevere is here described. Looking unto Jesus, (αφορωντες) turning away our eyes from sin, the world, and every insnaring object which would seduce our affections, and keeping him singly in our view, who is the author, and alone can be the finisher of our faith, by grace and strength derived from him, enabling us to follow his perfect pattern; who, for the joy that was set before him, that God's perfections might be glorified, full satisfaction made to Divine justice, his people's eternal redemption secured, and himself, as Mediator, be crowned with glory and honour, endured the cross, with all its horrors, exercising the most astonishing patience and unshaken fortitude, despising the shame of that ignominious tree, and is now, in consequence thereof, set down at the right hand of the throne of God, exalted to the highest dignity and majesty in the heavens. For consider him that endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, (αναλογισασθε) compare your sufferings with his, the infinite disproportion between your persons and him; the invincible patience and undisturbed composure with which he bore every insult and torment; reflect upon this often and deeply, lest ye be weary and faint in your minds, and let the eye of faith, fixed on him, draw out of his fulness the needful supplies of strength to follow his blessed footsteps. Note, (1.) Faith is the gift of Jesus, and he who begins must finish the work with power in our hearts. (2.) When we consider what the Son of God for our sakes freely endured, we shall be ashamed to complain of the comparatively trivial cross which we sustain, and boldly set our faces as a flint against all sufferings and reproaches, which for his sake we may be called to bear. (3.) Great and long continued trials are apt to weary out our feeble minds, so that we are ready to sink under them; but Jesus is before us; he saith, Look unto me:

and that reviving sight uncloses the dying eyes, re-animates the dejected spirit, rouses the fainting heart, and, inspired with renewed vigour, we run our heavenly race, made more than conquerors through his love.

4. [f] Ye have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin. 5. And ye have forgotten the exhortation, [g] which speaketh unto you as unto children, My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him: 6. For [h] whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth. 7. [i] If ye endure chastening, God dealeth with you as with sons: for what son is he whom the father chasteneth not? 8. [k] But if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons. 9. Furthermore, we have had fathers of our flesh which [l] corrected us, and we gave them reverence: [m] shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live? 10. For they verily for a few days chastened us after their own pleasure; [n] but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holiness. 11. [o] Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby. 12. Wherefore [p] lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees; 13. [q] And make † straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way; but let it rather be healed. 14. [r] Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord: 15. [s] Looking diligently lest any man [t] fail of the grace of God; lest any [u] root of bitterness springing up trouble you, and thereby many be defiled; 16. [x] Lest there be any fornicator, or profane person, as Esau, [y] who for one morsel of meat sold his birthright. 17. For ye know how that afterward, [z] when he would have inherited the blessing, he was rejected: for he found no ‡ place of repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears.

Verses 4—17. In support of what he had said before, the apostle,

I. Suggests the most engaging arguments to persevere:

(1.) God had hitherto preserved them in life. Ye have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin; and as he had not called them to the severest conflicts, it would be shameful indeed if they sunk under lesser trials. Note, (1.) Our warfare lies against sin, the deadly foe, who, if not vanquished, will destroy us body and soul for ever. We need be resolute, therefore, when our all is at stake. (2.) We are to acknowledge with thankfulness the kindness of our adored Lord, who proportions our trials to our strength.

(2.) The sufferings they had endured were the kind chastisements of a Father's rod, however evil the instruments might be who were the immediate authors of them. And ye have forgotten, or Have ye forgotten the exhortation which speaketh unto you as unto children? My son despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, on the one hand, neither slighting the affliction, unsuitably affected thereby, or stubborn under the rod: nor, on the other, faint when thou art rebuked of him, sinking under unbelief, impatient under the trial, or overwhelmed with despair. For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth for their good, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth into the bosom of his love. If ye endure chastening, far from counting it a token of wrath, God herein dealeth with you as with sons, with the kindest intention of your correction and amendment; for what son is he whom the father chasteneth not? There is no child of God but needs the gracious scourge; and our heavenly Father will not, like a foolishly fond parent, spare the needful stroke. But if ye be without chastisement, whereof all the true members of his family are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons; to be neglected, and not counted worth correction, would prove you to be a spurious race, whom God abandons to their own ways. Furthermore, we have had fathers of our flesh, which corrected us, and we gave them reverence, were in duty bound to submit to their paternal discipline, and to love them the more for their care in rebuking the evil they discovered in us: shall we not much rather then be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, from whose immediate hand our immortal souls are derived; meekly submitting to him, whose authority over us is so much greater; and this, that we may live in a state of holy communion with him and subjection to him, till he shall have purged out all our evil, and prepared us for a place in his better house above. For they verily for a few days chastened us after their own pleasure, and much passion, self-will, and weakness mixed with their corrections; but he, who is infinitely wise as well as boundless in love, never scourges us but for our profit, that, as the blessed issue of the afflictions which he is pleased to lay upon us, we might be partakers of his holiness, cleansed from the dross of corrupt affections, and renewed after his blessed image. No chastening for the present seemeth joyous, but grievous, and the flesh cannot but groan under the scourge: nevertheless, whilst faith supports us comfortably under the trial, we afterwards continually see cause to bless God for our suffering; since afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby; and we can say, by happy experience, it is good for me that I have been afflicted. Note, (1.) God's corrections must not be made light of on the one hand, nor should we on the other despair on account of them; but, humbling our souls under the mighty hand of the Lord, should patiently wait, in confidence that he will lift us up. (2.) God's chastisements are all sent out of pure love to his children; and therefore with dutiful submission, and lowly resignation, should be received. (3.) Though the Lord may leave others to themselves, yet he will not suffer his children to err without visiting their iniquities with a rod. It is a sad symptom of being an alien from his family, never to be visited with his corrections. (4.) If we are bound to reverence our earthly parents, and submit to their arbitrary and often self-willed corrections, how much more should the chastisements of our heavenly Father be embraced with thankfulness, to whom we owe so much higher reverence; who never strikes without cause, and so wisely and graciously orders his afflictive dispensations in time, manner, and measure, as shall be exactly suited to our wants, and effectually tend to our profiting. (5.) Far from judging of God's anger by the severity or length of our trials, we should from thence conclude his love is great towards us. He visits that he may purge us more thoroughly from our dross; and faith can make us rejoice even in the fires, under the confidence that peaceable fruits of righteousness shall be produced out of those trials, that to flesh and blood are most grievous.

2. He exhorts them not to faint or be disheartened, but to be vigorous in their Christian course. Wherefore lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees; cast away every desponding fear, and press with eagerness to the goal, encouraging each other nobly to persevere in the face of every difficulty and danger, depending on Almighty grace. And make straight paths for your feet, desiring to remove every obstacle at which yourselves or your brethren might stumble, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way of truth and righteousness, and the weak offended or perverted from the paths of godliness; but let it rather be healed, the feeble-minded supported, the disheartened encouraged, the weak confirmed, the fallen lifted up and restored again. Note, We should labour to be assisting each other in our heavenly way, and attentive to the good of our brethren's souls, as to our own.

3. He particularly directs them what to pursue. Follow peace with all men, desiring earnestly to maintain it in every relation, and with all persons, as far as is consistent with a good conscience; and holiness in heart and life and all manner of conversation, without which no man shall see the Lord, or be admitted to the beatific vision in glory everlasting. Note, Peace and holiness are essential to our hopes as Christians; we deceive ourselves if we think we can ever be saved, whilst enslaved by passion and vile affections.

4. He gives them a solemn caution against apostasy, enforced by Esau's fearful example. Looking diligently, watching over each other with holy jealousy, lest any man who hath made profession of the gospel, fail of the grace of God, and apostatize from the faith: lest any root of bitterness springing up trouble you, and thereby many be defiled, seduced by their heresies, and perverted by their ill examples: lest there be any fornicator or profane person, as Esau, who for one morsel of bread sold his birth-right, despising the sacred as well as civil privileges which were annexed thereto; and his punishment was suited to his crime, for ye know how that afterward, when he would have inherited the blessing and prevailed upon his father to retract what he had given to Jacob, he was rejected by him, for he found no place for repentance, nor would Isaac change his mind or reverse his word, though he sought it diligently with tears. Note, (1.) Apostates from the truth are the most dangerous enemies, and bitter opposers. (2.) Many, for the gratification of a bestial appetite, have, like Esau, renounced their sacred birth-right, and too late they will rue their sin and folly.

18. For ye are not come unto [a] the mount that might be touched, and that burned with fire, nor unto blackness, and darkness, and tempest, 19. [b] And the sound of a trumpet, and the voice of words; which voice they that heard entreated that the word should not be spoken to them any more: 20. (For they could not endure that which was commanded, [c] And if so much as a beast touch the mountain, it shall be stoned, or thrust through with a dart: 21. [d] And so terrible was the sight, that Moses said, I exceedingly fear and quake:) 22. But ye are come unto [e] mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an [f] innumerable company of angels, 23. [g] To the general assembly and church of the firstborn, which are ‖ written in heaven, and to [h] God the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, 24. And to Jesus [i] the mediator of the new * covenant, and to [k] the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel. 25. [l] See that ye refuse not him that speaketh: for [m] if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth, much more shall not we escape if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven: 26. Whose voice [n] then shook the earth: but now he hath promised, saying, Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven. 27. And this word, [o] Yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that † are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain. 28. Wherefore we receiving [p] a kingdom which cannot be moved, ‡ let us have grace, [q] whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear: 29. For [r] our God is a consuming fire.

Verses 18—29. To guard the Hebrews particularly from revolting back to Judaism, he sets before them the excellence of the gospel church and worship above the Judaical.

1. He reminds them of that dispensation of terror and bondage from which they had been delivered. For ye are not come unto the mount that might be touched, which was a palpable earthly substance, and not like the spiritual Zion, and that burned with fire, when God in terrible pomp descended thereon; nor unto blackness and darkness, which covered that typical dispensation; and tempest, emblematical of the storms of wrath which hang over the head of the transgressors; and the sound of a trumpet, which with louder, and still louder blasts, spread terrible dismay throughout the hosts of Israel; and the voice of words, in the most awful manner articulately pronouncing the ten commandments; which voice they that heard entreated that the word should not be spoken to them any more; so terrified were they at it, and begged that Moses might be their mediator, and that through him they might receive the revelation of the Divine Will: (for they could not endure that which was commanded, so unable were they to answer the demands of this perfect law, and dreaded its awful sanction, particularly that fearful edict; and if so much as a beast touch the mountain, during the time that the Divine Presence is there manifested, he shall be stoned, or thrust through with a dart. And so terrible was the sight, that Moses himself said, I exceedingly fear and quake,) so dark and terrible was that dispensation under which they had been held: and this should with hearty eagerness engage them to receive and hold fast that milder, brighter, spiritual dispensation of gospel grace, when God, without one terror spread around him, invited poor sinners, through his dear Son, to approach his throne and live. This more glorious state the apostle,

2. Describes. But ye are come unto mount Sion, the spiritual gospel church, where God, well pleased, takes up his blessed abode, and accepts the worship and service there performed; and unto the city of the living God, built on Christ the foundation, guarded by Almighty power, and blessed with the most transcendent privileges, the heavenly Jerusalem, where all the inhabitants are spiritualized in temper and affections, and made meet for their eternal mansions in glory; and to the innumerable company of angels, your fellow-servants, who minister unto them who shall be heirs of salvation; to the general assembly and church of the first-born, which are written in heaven, in the Lamb's book of life, the noble army of saints, whether militant in earth or triumphant in heaven; and to God the judge of all, as reconciled now to you in the Son of his love; and having boldness to approach the throne in that great day, when he shall judge the world by him to whom all judgment is committed; and to the spirits of just men made perfect, now entered into their eternal rest and perfected in holiness, with whom you maintain communion, as influenced by the same Spirit, justified by the same blood, members of the same body, pursuing the same end, and ready to join their services in the immediate presence of God and the Lamb; and to Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant, through whom all these invaluable privileges and blessings are derived down to us; and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel: his blood cried for vengeance, but the blood which Jesus shed, sprinkled by faith upon our consciences, speaks peace and comfort, and eternal blessedness: as it infinitely exceeds in excellence that of Abel's sacrifice, much more shall it obtain acceptance and favour with God for all those, who, sprinkled therewith, boldly appear in the presence of the Most High and Most Holy.

3. From these considerations he proceeds to exhort them to take heed to themselves. See that ye refuse not him that speaketh in the gospel: for if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth, even Moses who delivered the sacred oracles of the law to the people, much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven, that Lord of life and glory who came down from heaven, and is returned thither again, and by the inspiration of his Spirit, which, in such an astonishing manner, he hath sent from thence, speaks now in his gospel word; whose voice then shook the earth, when Sinai trembled at his presence: but now he hath promised, saying, Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven, the Jewish church, with all their civil and ecclesiastical polity. And this word, Yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, not for a perpetuity, but for a while only, as was the case of the Jewish tabernacle and economy, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain, and that the gospel church, worship, and privilege, may endure unalterable unto the end of time. Wherefore, we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, and by faith admitted to a participation of the privileges of that kingdom of gospel grace, which will issue shortly in a kingdom of glory, let us remember, esteem, and value our distinguished mercies, and have grace to hold fast the doctrine of truth, and beg a more abundant measure of the Spirit, whereby we may serve God acceptably, through Jesus Christ, with reverence and godly fear, under a sense of our own sinfulness and unworthiness. For our God is a consuming fire, and will execute fearful vengeance on every apostate from the faith and practice of the gospel. Note, (1.) They who have received the grace of God in truth, have a kingdom that cannot be moved. (2.) Constant worship and waiting upon God is the appointed way wherein he hath promised to bestow on us the grace which can enable us to serve him acceptably. (3.) The fire of eternal vengeance will assuredly light down upon the apostate and impenitent soul.

CHAP. XIII.—ANNO DOMINI, 64.

The apostle concludes with recommending several excellent duties to them, as the proper fruits of faith, ver. 1—18. then bespeaks their prayers for him, and offers up his prayers to God for them, gives them some hope of seeing himself and Timothy, and ends with the general salutation and benediction, ver. 18. to the end.

Verses 1—17. Having warned them against apostasy, and set before them the excellency of the gospel dispensation, he concludes with exhorting them to the practice of those duties which most adorn their holy profession.

1. To mutual and fervent charity. Let brotherly love continue, cultivate this blessed temper, and abide and abound in the exercise of it towards each other.

2. To hospitality. Be not forgetful to entertain strangers; those who travelled to preach the gospel; or by persecution were driven from their native homes: or whose distressed circumstances pleaded for this kind relief; for thereby some have entertained angels unawares, as Abraham and Lot.

3. To Christian sympathy with the afflicted. Remember them that are in bonds, as bound with them, and tenderly feeling for their miseries; and them which suffer adversity, as being yourselves also in the body, and liable to the same sufferings, and fellow-members in the same mystical body of Christ.

4. To chastity. Marriage is honourable in all, when entered into according to the divine prescription, and the bed undefiled by any forbidden or impure embraces: but whoremongers and adulterers God will judge, and execute upon them condign punishment, if they repent not of the evil of their ways.

5. Contentment. Let your conversation be without covetousness, free from the immoderate pursuit of worldly wealth, inordinate care about it, idolatrous delight in and reluctance to part with it; and be content with such things as ye have, satisfied in the portion which God's providence hath allotted you, and envying none their superior affluence: for he, who is able to supply all your wants, whilst in the way of duty and honest industry you depend upon him, hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee, for what was spoken particularly to Joshua shall be fulfilled to every faithful soul, respecting all their concerns, temporal and spiritual, who shall be under the divine blessing, guidance, and protection. So that we may boldly say, with the Psalmist, the Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me; greater is he that is for us than all that are against us; and the devices of wicked men, or wicked devils, he can overrule, and even make them work together for our good.

6. To imitate their dead pastors, and to obey their living guides.

(1.) To imitate the good examples of their departed spiritual teachers. Remember them who have the rule over you, who have spoken unto you the word of God in time past, and have now finished their testimony; whose faith follow, hold fast the doctrines which they preached, and copy after the holy lives they led, considering the end of their conversation, how singly they aimed at the glory of God in life, and what a happy exit they made at death; and well may we desire that our last end may be like theirs. And though the best of ministers are dying men, the great Shepherd and Bishop of souls ever lives to feed his redeemed flock; Jesus Christ, the glorious object of our faith and hope, the same unchangeable in nature, grace, and love towards his people, yesterday, in all past ages, now and for ever the portion of his saints, as your faithful guides have taught you. Be not therefore carried about with strange and divers doctrines, different from that unadulterated gospel which they preached unto you: for it is a good thing that the heart be established with grace, and fixed in its dependence on the sovereign grace of God in Jesus Christ, as the foundation of all hope, and peace, and holiness, in time and eternity; and not to be seduced by Judaizing teachers with any pretences that the Mosaic ritual is still in force, and a difference of meats and drinks, and such like things necessary to be observed, in order to acceptance with God, all which are now abrogated, and have not profited them that have been occupied therein; even when they were in force, they were unable to purge the conscience, and make him who did the service perfect; and much less can they now profit, when they are abolished. We need none of the Levitical sacrifices to feast upon; we have one infinitely better; an altar, and sacrifice, whereof they have no right to eat who serve the tabernacle, for no part of the sin-offering under the law was to be eaten, but those bodies of the beasts, whose blood is brought into the sanctuary, on the great day of atonement, by the high-priest for the sin of the people, are burnt without the camp. Wherefore they who remain subject to this law, can have no more right to feed upon the body and blood of Christ, which are received by the faithful in the Lord's Supper, than the Levitical priests had to feed upon the flesh of the atoning sacrifice; in exact correspondence with which Jesus also, that he might sanctify his people, his spiritual Israel, with his own blood, suffered without the gate, before he went up to heaven, the true sanctuary, there to plead the atonement which he had made. Let us go forth therefore unto him without the camp, bearing his reproach; turning our backs upon the temple and all its ritual services, founding no expectations upon them, but cleaving in faith and love to Christ alone, content to be treated with every insult, reproach, or cruelty for his sake, boldly carrying our cross to Calvary after him, and, if need be, ready to die for his sake. For here we have no continuing city; this polluted world is not our rest, nor do we desire to take up our rest here below, but we seek one to come, a city that hath abiding foundations, whose maker and builder is God, where saints, and angels, and Jesus himself dwelleth. By him therefore let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, since all sacrifices of atonement are at an end, and praise and blessings for redeeming love, are the services now required at our hands; that is, the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his name, an oblation well pleasing and acceptable to God through Jesus Christ. Not that we must rest merely in words, but our works also must testify our grateful acknowledgment of the divine mercy; therefore to do good, and to communicate of your substance to the needy, especially to those of the household of faith, and, according to your ability, forget not: for with such sacrifices God is well pleased, and for the Saviour's sake will bless the offerer.

(2.) They are enjoined, as to follow the example of their departed pastors, so to obey their living guides. Obey them that have the rule over you, your spiritual teachers, who instruct you in the word of God, and submit yourselves meekly to their reproofs and admonitions: for they watch for your souls, to guard you from deceivers, to warn you from approaching danger, to feed you in the pastures of ordinances, and to help you on your heavenly way; and this they do with all holy jealousy, zeal, and diligence, knowing the solemn reckoning which they must one day make, as they must give an account: that they may do it with joy, and not with grief: for that would not only be grievous to them, but most unprofitable for you, whose condemnation would be highly aggravated by all their fruitless labours bestowed upon you. Note, (1.) Ministers can never too often or too deeply consider the awful account they must one day give before their eternal Judge. (2.) When we have delivered our souls, then it becomes our people's care to see that their profiting appears: if they trifle with our message, their blood lies upon their own heads.

Verses 18—25. The apostle here,

1. Recommends himself to their prayers. Pray for us, that we may be wise, vigilant, zealous, successful; and this will be your own benefit, for the more the people pray for us, the more profiting will they receive from us: for we trust we have a good conscience, in all things willing to live honestly, to discharge our awful trust with fidelity, and so to behave as to confute the calumnies of our enemies, approving ourselves to God, and enjoying the testimony of a good conscience. But I beseech you the rather to do this, that I may be restored to you the sooner: and that, being delivered from my present confinement, you may again reap the fruit of my labours among you. Note, (1.) Every faithful minister, however maligned by wicked men, hath the testimony of God and a good conscience, and that is his rejoicing. (2.) Mercies are doubly sweet which come in answer to prayer.

2. He in return offers up his own prayers on their behalf. Now the God of peace, our reconciled God, that hath spoken peace to our consciences, and hath brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, in token of his perfect satisfaction in his undertaking, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, shed to procure our peace and pardon, and all the blessings of grace and glory for his redeemed, make you perfect in every good work to do his will, enabling you to go from strength to strength, till you arrive at the perfection of knowledge, holiness, and blessedness in glory everlasting, working in you, by his own almighty grace, that which is pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ, by whom alone every spiritual gift descends upon us; to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen! whose is the work, and to whom the praise is to be ascribed. Note, (1.) Our peace with God is bought with the blood of the everlasting covenant, and he is thereby become our God for ever and ever. (2.) Every thing pleasing in us to God is his own work; left to ourselves, evil, and only evil continually, is the native produce of our fallen hearts. (3.) God must have all the glory of our salvation, from the beginning to the end; for we are nothing, and he is all in all.

3. He exhorts them very affectionately to attend to what he had said, and informs them of Timothy's release. Now I beseech you, brethren, dearly beloved, suffer the word of exhortation; take in good part what I have said, and receive the comfort it is intended to communicate to you; for I have written a letter unto you in few words, when the subject would have admitted of great enlargement. Know ye, that our brother Timothy is set at liberty from his bonds for Christ; with whom, if he come to me shortly, and it please the Lord that I regain my liberty, I will see you.

4. He concludes with his affectionate salutations. Salute all them that have the rule over you, your faithful ministers, and all the saints in Christ Jesus. They of Italy salute you, wishing you the best of blessings. Grace be with you all. Amen! May the sovereign and everlasting love of God in Christ, with all its transcendently blessed effects, be with you in time, and continue to influence and guide, till you arrive at his kingdom of glory in eternity.

A PRACTICAL COMMENT

UPON THE

GENERAL EPISTLE

JAMES.

Introduction.

THE writer of this epistle was James the son of Alpheus, who was cousin-german to Christ, and one of the twelve apostles, Mat. x. 3. He is called a pillar, Gal. ii. 9. And this epistle of his cannot be disputed, without loosening a foundation-stone.

It is called a general epistle, because (as some think) not directed to any particular person or church; but such a one as we call a circular letter. Others think it is called general or catholic, to distinguish it from the epistles of Ignatius, Barnabas, Polycarp, and others, that were noted in the primitive times, but not generally received in the church, and on that account not canonical, as this is.

The time when this epistle was written is uncertain, probably about the year 60. The design of it is to reprove Christians for their great degeneracy, both in faith and manners; and to prevent the spreading of those libertine doctrines, which threatened the destruction of all practical godliness. It was also a special intention of the author of this epistle, to awaken the Jewish nation to a sense of the greatness and nearness of those judgments which were coming upon them; and to support all true Christians in the way of their duty, under those calamities and persecutions they might meet with. The truths laid down are very momentous and necessary to be maintained; and the rules for practice, as here stated, are such as ought to be observed in our times as well as in preceding ages.

CHAP. I.—ANNO DOMINI, 60.

After the inscription and salutation, ver. 1. Christians are taught how to carry it when under the cross, ver. 2—12. He warns them not to impute to God any temptations to sin, since he cannot be the author of sin, but is the author of all good, ver. 13—18. All passion, and rash anger, and vile affections ought to be suppressed. The word of God should be made our chief study: and what we hear and know of it, we must take care to practise, otherwise our religion will prove but a vain thing. To which is added, an account wherein pure religion consists, ver. 19—27.

1. JAMES,[a] a servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ, [b] to the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad, greeting. 2. My brethren, [c] count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations; 3. [d] Knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience. 4. [e] But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing. 5. [f] If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. 6. [g] But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering: for he that wavereth [h] is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. 7. For let not that man think that he shall receive any thing of the Lord. 8. [i] A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways. 9. Let the brother of low degree * rejoice [k] in that he is exalted: 10. [l] But the rich, in that he is made low: because as the flower of the grass he shall pass away. 11. For the sun is no sooner risen with a burning heat, but it withereth the grass, and the flower thereof falleth, and the [m] grace of the fashion of it perisheth: so also shall the rich man fade away in his ways. 12. [n] Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for, [n] when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him.

Verses 1—12. We have here,

1. The inscription of the epistle. James, who counts it his highest honour to subscribe himself a servant of God, and, or even, of the Lord Jesus Christ, to the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad, wherever dispersed throughout the world, sendeth greeting, wishing that all blessings may descend upon them, whether of this world or a better.

2. He exhorts them, under the persecutions and troubles which for Christ's sake they endured, to rejoice. My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations, and by Divine Providence are permitted to be variously exercised by the malice of the wicked; esteem their reproaches your honour, and your losses your truest gain, knowing this, by divine testimony, and happy experience, that the trying of your faith worketh patience; your faith is proved genuine by this blessed effect, and every exercise of it tends to confirm your hearts in meek and humble resignation. But let patience have her perfect work; be the trials never so many, never so grievous, never so long continued, bear up under them with persevering steadfastness, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing; arriving at the highest eminence of grace, and holding out till you reach the perfection of holiness in heaven. Note, (1.) Surrounded as we are with temptation, and beset with corruption, we have need of patience, that we faint not under our trials. (2.) Philosophy may enjoin submission, but Christianity only can teach us to rejoice under affliction. (3.) Faith is the root of all graces: as that is vigorous, they will be in exercise. (4.) The sharpest conflicts which we have to sustain prove in their issue, when rightly improved, the greatest blessings to our souls.

3. If we would act aright under our trials, we must be upon our knees often, to beg divine direction. If any of you lack wisdom, and know not how to act in any emergence, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men, who apply according to his word, liberally, and upbraideth not; never weary in granting, nor ever reproaching his supplicants with their unworthiness, or the multitude of the favours which he bestows; and it shall be given him; all the counsel and assistance which such a one needs shall be bestowed in answer to his prayer. But let him ask in faith nothing wavering; not distrusting the faithfulness, power, and grace of God in Christ, however difficult and embarrassed his circumstances may be: for he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea, driven with the wind, and tossed; the sport of every gust of temptation, restless, impatient, fluctuating, unsettled in principle and practice: for let not that man think that he shall receive any thing of the Lord, whilst he dishonours him by his unbelief and fickleness. Such a double-minded man, divided between hope and fear, Christ and the world, halting between both, and willing to reconcile the incompatible services of God and Mammon, is unstable in all his ways, and having no fixed end in view, can never prosper in his soul, nor expect an answer to his prayer. Note, (1.) We have every encouragement to approach a throne of grace, and every possible assurance of finding relief there. How perverse and foolish then must we be, if we make not use of this invaluable privilege? (2.) They who come to God with their requests must honour him by their confidence in his power, truth, and love: unbelief shuts the blessing. (3.) When the heart is unstable and wavering, prayer cannot ascend with acceptance before God.

4. Let the brother of low degree rejoice in that he is exalted to the infinite riches of grace, and the transcendent dignity of an heir of glory; but the rich brother in that he is made low; taught, amidst all his affluence and grandeur, true poverty of spirit, and lowliness of mind, and ready ever to part with any thing he possesses for the sake of Christ, because he knows the fleeting and perishing nature of all worldly wealth, and that as a flower of the grass he shall pass away, and leave it all behind. For the sun is no sooner risen with a burning heat, but it withereth the grass, and the flower thereof falleth, and the grace of the fashion of it perisheth: so also shall the rich man fade away in his ways. Often in this world riches make themselves wings, and fly away as an eagle towards heaven, and death at farthest will prove their vanity.

5. A blessing is pronounced upon faithful perseverance. Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; far from proving our hurt, our trials in their issue tend to advance our truest felicity: for when he is tried, as gold in the furnace, and comes forth brighter from the fires, he shall receive the crown of life and glory, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, hath promised, and will at the great day of his appearing assuredly give to them that love him. Note, (1.) We must be tried before we can be crowned. (2.) Where the love of God is in the heart, many waters cannot quench it, neither can any floods of persecution or temptation drown it. (3.) The reward of fidelity is still the gift of God, who freely promises, by his grace supports, and of his mercy bestows the crown of life.

13. [o] Let no man say, when he is tempted, I am tempted of God; for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man: 14. [p] But every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed. 15. [q] Then, when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin: and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death. 16. [r] Do not err, [s] my beloved brethren. 17. [t] Every good gift, and every perfect gift, is from above, and cometh down from [u] the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. 18. [x] Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first-fruits of his creatures.

Verses 13—18. Concerning the cause of all the evil of sin which we fall into, when brought into temptation, we are taught,

1. That it is not to be imputed to God. Let no man say, when he is tempted to commit sin, in order to extricate himself from suffering, I am tempted of God; for this is abominably impious, since God, who is in his nature perfectly holy, cannot himself be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man to iniquity, whatever providential afflictions he may lay upon them. Note, We are very apt to cast our sins at God's door, and to blame him for putting us in such temptations; whereas our trials are designed to exercise our graces, not to draw out our corruption.

2. We have only ourselves to blame for all the evil which is in us. But every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed; foolishly and perversely following the bait which Satan lays, beguiled by his enticements, and dragged by the cords of corrupt affections from the paths of truth and holiness. Then when lust hath conceived in thought and desire, it bringeth forth sin, gaining the consent of the will to the perpetration of iniquity; and sin when it is finished, in the act, and impenitently persisted in, bringeth forth death of body and soul for ever. Do not err, my beloved brethren, by entertaining false and injurious conceptions of the blessed God in this matter. Note, (1.) The root of all evil is in our fallen hearts. (2.) Sin enslaves us by flattery; it is the deceitfulness of unrighteousness which proves our ruin: and false hope supports vain confidence till it appears that there is a lie in our right hand. (3.) If we do not destroy the power of sin, we may be assured it will finally destroy us.

3. All good which is in us proceeds wholly from God. Every good gift, and every perfect gift, every bounty of providence, and every spiritual endowment, which tends to the perfection of our nature in knowledge and holiness, is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, the author of all light, natural, moral, spiritual, or eternal; with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. The sun that gilds the firmament is obscured often by clouds, rises and sets, is eclipsed, and moves to and fro between the tropics, but God knows no change; nothing but good, without the shadow of evil, can proceed from him. Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, not for any desert of ours, but of his sovereign pleasure, sending us his gospel, and making it effectual, through the power of the Spirit, to quicken our souls from the death of sin, and raise us to newness of life; that, as his adopted and regenerate sons, we should be a kind of first-fruits of his creatures; consecrated to him, and devoted to his immediate service. Note, (1.) All glorying must be excluded, if all good be of grace; for what then have we, which we have not received? (2.) Those who are born of God, owe it to his sovereign will and pleasure, not to any thing in themselves, they lying in the same corrupted mass of mankind as others, till separated by his grace. (3.) All who are begotten by the word of truth in the gospel, must from that moment consider themselves as consecrated to God's service, and bound to live to his glory.

19. [y] Wherefore, my beloved brethren, let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath: 20. [z] For the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God. 21. Wherefore [a] lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, and [b] receive with meekness the ingrafted word, which is able to save your souls. 22. But [c] be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves. 23. [d] For if any be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass: 24. For he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was. 25. [e] But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man [f] shall be blessed in his † deed. 26. [g] If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain. 27. [h] Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, [i] To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and [k] to keep himself unspotted from the world.

Verses 19—27. The apostle here enjoins them,

1. To restrain their passions. Wherefore, my beloved brethren, let every man be swift to hear God's word; slow to speak, not daring to censure the ways of providence and grace; slow to wrath, not disputing or quarrelling with the truths of God, or treating those who differ in points of controversy with contempt or anger. for the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God; the cause of God cannot be served by our selfish passions; nor with such a spirit may we hope to speak aright, or to convince others. Note, (1.) We should not be obstinate in our own opinions, but be willing to hear the objections of others. (2.) God's cause is not to be served by noise and anger, but by meekness and the word of truth. Whoever is in the right, they that are angry are sure to be in the wrong.

2. To put away every other vile and corrupt affection. Wherefore lay apart all filthiness, and superfluity of naughtiness, every defiling lust, and malicious temper; and receive with meekness the ingrafted word, that it may take fast hold of your affections, and be incorporated with your hearts; bowing before it with all humility, and receiving it on God's authority with faith and love; which is able to save your souls, when thus accompanied by the power of the Spirit. Note, Corrupt affections entertained, disincline and indispose the soul for receiving God's word, turn us away from hearing it, and prejudice us against the truth.

3. We must be not only hearers of the truth, but practise it also, else it can profit us nothing. But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves, by any fallacious conclusions, to the ruin of your souls. For if any man be a hearer of the word merely, resting upon that as of any avail, and is not a doer of what he hears, he is like a man beholding his natural face in a glass; for he beholdeth himself, and hastily passing by, straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was. Such is the careless and cursory hearer of the word: he may discover whilst under the word, in a transient glance, something of the sinfulness and depravity of his nature, and his need of Christ; but it makes no deep or lasting impression; no sooner is he gone forth into the world, than he forgets his convictions, and continues utterly unchanged in temper and conduct. But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, attentively viewing himself in the glass of the gospel, wherein we are called from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the sons of God; and continueth therein, careful to hold fast in principle, and to correspond in practice with the things therein revealed; he not being a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, diligently to obey what God commands, this man shall be blessed in his deed, made happy in God's present service, and his end be everlasting life. Note, (1.) True religion consists not in profession merely, but in practice, without which Christianity is but an empty name. (2.) Many by hearing pick up some right notions in their heads, whose hearts are never savingly affected. (3.) The word of God is as the faithful mirror, that knows not to flatter: if we attentively view ourselves in that glass, we shall see the horrid deformity of our fallen spirits, and the foul spots of native corruption, and learn to entertain the lowliest thoughts of our vile selves, and wretched services, when we see them all polluted with sin. (4.) They are only blessed, who, having discovered their real state, are seriously led to the fountain open for sin and uncleanness; and in a Saviour's blood, and by the power of his grace, have their filthiness cleansed, and their nature renewed after his image, so as henceforth to walk and please God.

4. He marks the difference between true and false religion. If any man among you seem to be religious, making such a profession, and yet bridleth not his tongue, from railing, reproach, slander, profaneness, bitterness, or proud talkativeness to display his own talents, this man's religion is vain; however plausible he may appear, his heart is rotten; and whilst he would build up his own excellence by detracting from others' worth, his hypocrisy is visible through the mask. Pure religion and undefiled, before God and the Father, that religion which he approves, is dictated by his word, and aims at his glory, is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction; stretching out the kind hand of charity to relieve, sympathizing with them, and affording them every assistance which they need and we can give; and to keep himself unspotted from the world; neither polluted by the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, nor the pride of life; but preserved pure for God, amidst the overflowings of ungodliness. Note, (1.) We have to do with a heart-searching God, who requireth truth in the inward parts. (2.) Where the soul is right with God, there purity and charity will be manifest in every word and work. (3.) This world is full of defilement; it will need much watchfulness to keep our garments unspotted.

CHAP. II.—ANNO DOMINI, 60.

In this chapter the apostle condemns all partiality to the rich, and despising the poor, ver. 1—7. He shows that the whole law is to be fulfilled, and that mercy should be followed as well as justice, ver. 8—13. He exposes the error and folly of those that boast of faith without works, telling us that this is but a dead faith, and such a faith as devils have, not the faith of Abraham, or of Rahab, ver. 14. to the end.

1. MY brethren, have not [a] the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, [b] the Lord of glory, with [c] respect of persons. 2. For if there come into your * assembly a man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel, and there come in also a poor man in vile raiment; 3. [d] And ye have respect to him that weareth the gay clothing, and say unto him, Sit thou here † in a good place; and say to the poor, Stand thou there, or sit here under my footstool: 4. [e] Are ye not then partial in yourselves, and are become judges of evil thoughts? 5. Hearken, [f] my beloved brethren, [g] hath not God chosen the poor of this world [h] rich in faith, and heirs of ‡ the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him? 6. But [i] ye have despised the poor. Do not rich men oppress you, and draw you before the judgment-seats? 7. [k] Do not they blaspheme that worthy name by the which ye are called?

Verses 1—7. The apostle here,

1. In general warns them against all undue respect of persons, because of their rank in life. My brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, which centres in him as the object, and is derived from him as the author and finisher of it, the Lord of glory, with respect of persons; acting with undue partiality, unbecoming the disciples of Jesus, who is himself exalted to the highest glory, and hath prepared eternal mansions for his people without distinction of rich or poor, and therefore we should make none in the merits of any cause which comes before us. Note, A sight of Christ, and the glory provided for his people, stamps vanity on all the puny differences which here subsist between men.

2. He gives an instance of the great evil and injustice of all such partiality. For if there come into your assembly, for religious worship, or rather into your court, where causes civil or ecclesiastical are determining, a man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel, and there come in also a poor man, who is a party in the cause to be tried, in vile raiment, making a wretched appearance; and ye have respect to him that weareth the gay clothing, and with evident partiality on his side, say unto him with great deference, Sit thou here in a good place; and say to the poor with insolence and contempt, Stand thou here at a distance, or sit here under my footstool, in any despicable place, are ye not then partial in yourselves, and are become judges of evil thoughts? disposed to favour the rich, and oppress the poor; and how criminal is such a behaviour? Hearken, my beloved brethren, Hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him? Is not the gospel chiefly preached to them? and are they not for the most part called to the participation of all its glorious privileges of grace here, and glory hereafter? and if God hath so highly honoured them, we surely ought not to treat them with disdain or partiality. But ye have despised the poor; to your shame and guilt be it spoken. Do not rich men, to whom ye pay such undue deference, oppress you, and draw you before judgment-seats, with litigious suits, and exercise the most cruel tyranny over you? Do not they, who are high in the world, prove your bitterest persecutors, and blaspheme that worthy name by the which ye are called? and then surely ye have no cause to caress them. Note, (1.) All partiality in judgment is in God's sight abominable. (2.) Among the poor, God's saints are chiefly to be found; and the riches of faith, and heirship of glory are infinitely more valuable than the wealth of both the Indies, or the widest earthly domains. (3.) They who love God, however poor, can never be despicable, since they are possessed of the highest dignity, as heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ.

8. If ye fulfil the ‖ royal law according to the scripture, [m] Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself, ye do well: 9. [n] But if ye have respect to persons, ye commit sin, and are convinced of the law as transgressors. 10. [o] For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all. 11. For ‖ [p] he that said, Do not commit adultery, said also, Do not kill. Now, if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the law. 11. [q] So speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by [r] the law of liberty. 13. [s] For he shall have judgment without mercy that hath shewed no mercy; and mercy * [t] rejoiceth against judgment.

Verses 8—13. The apostle,

1. Lays down the only proper rule of conduct. If ye fulfil the royal law, enacted by the King of kings, according to the scripture, where he hath revealed his will to us, and among the most eminent precepts stands this, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself, treating every man with that benevolence, kindness, and impartiality, which, if in their case, you would reasonably expect from them, ye do well; such a conduct is honourable, and becoming your profession; but if ye have respect to persons, showing more favour to the rich than to the poor, ye commit sin, and are convinced of the law as transgressors, (Lev. xix. 15.) and one such wilful iniquity must issue in your eternal ruin. For whosoever shall keep the whole law, admitting that it were possible, and yet should offend in one point, is guilty of all; such an allowed transgression would be as evident a contempt of the authority of the lawgiver, as if he broke every precept; and, as the wages of every sin is death, must expose the soul to the wrath of God. For he that said, Do not commit adultery; said also, Do not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the law, and liable to suffer its awful penalty.

2. He exhorts them to behave as becomes the gospel which they profess. So speak ye, and so do, in every word and work seek to approve yourselves to God, as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty; and who being brought under the gospel dispensation of light and grace, have the strongest obligations to show an impartial, genuine, universal, and cheerful obedience to the Redeemer's commands.

3. He supports his exhortation by a most awful consideration. For he shall have judgment without mercy, that hath showed no mercy, but hath been partial to the rich, and oppressive to the poor; whilst, on the other hand, where by divine grace the heart hath been influenced to exercise fervent charity, there mercy rejoiceth against judgment; such a one shall not be afraid of appearing at God's bar, but through the great Redeemer shall have boldness, and find favour with God on that day. Note, A solemn sense upon our minds of an approaching judgment, will necessarily have the most powerful influence on our conduct.

14. What doth it profit, my brethren, [u] though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? can faith save him?
15. If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, 16. [x] And one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?
17. [y] Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being † alone. 18. Yea a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works: shew me thy faith ‡ without thy works, and [z] I will shew thee my faith by my works. 19. [a] Thou believest that there is one God; thou doest well: the devils also believe, and tremble. 20. But wilt thou know, [b] O vain man, that [c] faith without works is dead? 21. Was not Abraham our father [d] justified by works, when he had offered Isaac his son upon the altar? 22. || Seest thou [e] how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect? 23. And the scripture was fulfilled which saith, [f] Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness: and he was called [g] the Friend of God. 24. Ye see then how that [h] by works a man is justified, and not by faith only. 25. Likewise also, was not Rahab the harlot [i] justified by works, [k] when she had received the messengers, and had sent them out another way? 26. For as the body without the * spirit is dead, so [l] faith without works is dead also.

Verses 14—26. The apostle having spoken of the royal law, proceeds to show the influence of faith on all holy obedience; not, as many vainly suggest, in opposition to Paul, or to correct his doctrine: their word proceedeth from that one Spirit, who is truth itself, and cannot contradict his own revelation. Paul speaks of faith as justifying the sinner in the sight of God; James speaks of it as justifying us in the sight of men, by the effects which it produces in justified persons, for which Paul was equally an advocate. See Gal. v. 6. 1 Thes. i. 3. Tit. iii. 8.

1. True faith ever produces genuine fruit, and worketh by love, without which the profession of faith is useless. What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? Saying and having are very different things. What can a mere boasted name signify? Can faith, such a faith, save him? If a brother or sister be naked, or destitute of daily food, and the necessaries of life, and one of you, pretending to charity, say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit? such empty words have nothing of godlike charity in them, and are mere sounding brass, and tinkling cymbal. Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone, an empty profession, without real life and power. Yea a man may say, to a vaunting hypocrite who pleads his faith, Thou hast faith in name, and I have works; show me thy faith, to which thou makest such vain pretensions, without thy works, of which if thou art destitute, how wilt thou prove its genuineness and reality? and I will show thee my faith by my works, which are the only indisputable evidences before men of its truth. Thou mayest perhaps say thou art no atheist; thou believest that there is one God: so far thou doest well: but what influence hath this faith upon thee? the devils also believe and tremble, and their faith is perhaps herein more operative than thine. But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead? and wants every proof of its soundness and sincerity. Note, (1.) To rehearse the articles of our creed, if we have not the truth of faith in our heart, will not advance us above the devils. (2.) All pretences to faith are but delusion, where men's works deny him in whom they profess to believe.

2. He supports what he advances with scripture evidence:

[1.] In the case of Abraham. Was not Abraham our father justified by works, and proved to be a true believer, when he had offered his son Isaac upon the altar? then his justification in the sight of God, which he had many years before obtained, (Rom. iv. 10, 11.) became evident, and the sincerity of his faith apparent to all men. Seest thou how faith wrought with his works, effectually engaging him to obey God's command; and by works was faith made perfect; manifested to be right in kind, and in the most vigorous exercise. And the scripture was fulfilled, and seen to be true, which said, many years before that event, (see Gen. xv. 6.) Abraham believed God and it was imputed unto him for righteousness: and he was called the Friend of God. Ye see, then, by this instance, how that by works a man is justified, and the reality of his character as a believer discovered, and not by faith only, which is such only in name, without producing any genuine fruit that demonstrates its living influence: or though it be real, can only appear to men by the effects which it produces.

[2.] In the case of Rahab. Likewise, also, was not Rahab the harlot justified by works? and did she not give a solid proof of the faith she possessed before the spies arrived at her house, that God would infallibly give the land of Canaan to Israel; when, in consequence thereof, great as the danger was to which she must expose herself, she had received the messengers, who came to spy out the country, and had sent them out another way?

From the whole, therefore, it appears evident, that nominal faith, or the mere profession of it, without any living fruits of grace produced from it, is mere hypocrisy. For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also.

Where that vital principle is implanted, its powerful energy will be seen: and we may assuredly conclude, where no fruits of grace appear in the temper and conversation, that the soul is as really dead in sin, as the body is dead when the spirit is departed, and nothing but the lifeless clay remains.

CHAP. III.—ANNO DOMINI, 60.

The apostle here reproves all arrogance of talk or behaviour. 1. Those who profess religion, ought especially to govern their tongues, ver. 1—12. 2. True wisdom makes men meek, and avoiders of strife and envy; and hereby may easily be distinguished from a wisdom that is earthly and hypocritical, ver. 13. to the end.

1 MY brethren, [a] be not many masters, knowing that we shall receive the greater * condemnation. 2. [b] For in many things we offend all. [c] If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body. 3. Behold, [d] we put bits in the horses' mouths, that they may obey us; and we turn about their whole body. 4. Behold also the ships, which though they be so great, and [e] are driven of fierce winds, yet are they turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governor listeth. 5. Even so the tongue is a little member, [f] and boasteth great things. Behold how great † a matter a little fire kindleth! 6. [g] And the tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity: so is the tongue among our members, that it defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature; and it is set on fire of hell. 7. For every ‡ kind of beasts, and of birds, and of serpents, and of things in the sea, is tamed, and hath been tamed of || mankind: 8. But the tongue can no man tame: [h] it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison. 9. [i] Therewith bless we God, even the Father; and therewith curse we men, [k] which are made after the similitude of God. 10. [l] Out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not so to be. 11. Doth a fountain send forth at the same * place sweet water and bitter? 12. Verses 1—12. They who have the least pretensions to true godliness, are often the most talkative professors of it; to bridle the tongue is therefore among the proofs of living faith.

1. He warns them against a magisterial and censorial behaviour. My brethren, be not many masters; affect not to set up for teachers, (διδασκαλοι,) loving to hear yourselves talk, and liberally dealing out reproof and censure; knowing that we shall receive the greater condemnation, by being thus forward to pronounce sentence on others, when we do not truly first judge ourselves: for if we were duly sensible of our own faults, we should be less rigid in our judgment of others; seeing in many things we offend all; and the more we know of our own hearts, the more shall we be obliged to own, that our censure can nowhere so justly light upon as ourselves: for we must be conscious to more evil within, than we can know of all the world beside.

2. He enjoins them to bridle their tongues. If any man offend not in word, and hath such a guard over himself, as to utter nothing rash, opprobrious, false, or sinful, the same is a perfect man, a finished Christian, far advanced in divine life; and able also to bridle the whole body, and restrain the irregular appetites and passions which war against the soul. Behold we put bits in the horses' mouths, that they may obey us; and we turn about their whole body, governing and directing thereby all their motions. Behold also the ships, which though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet are they turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governor or pilot listeth. Even so the tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things; and according as it is under government, or lawless, is capable of doing much good, or much evil.

3. The evil of an unruly tongue is great. Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth! what a conflagration blazes from a single spark! And the tongue, when let loose, is a fire, a world of iniquity, pouring forth the abominations of the heart: so is the tongue amongst our members, that it defileth the whole body and setteth on fire the course of nature, in nations, churches, families; spreading sedition, treasons, heresies, blasphemies, divisions, enmity; in every age, in every station, its baleful influence appears: and it is set on fire of hell; infected with the old serpent's venom, promoting the interest of Satan's kingdom by profaneness, rage, lying, lewdness, slander, and all the train of evils which flow from thence; the punishment of which will be, that in hell it shall be tormented in flames unquenchable. For every kind of beasts, the most savage, and of birds, however untractable in their nature; yea, and of serpents, and of things in the sea, is tamed, and hath been tamed of mankind; mastered by their power, and rendered gentle by human art: but the tongue can no man tame; nothing short of almighty power and grace can restrain or cure its malignity; it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison; deadly to the owner, and mortal as far as its influence extends. Therewith bless we God, even the Father, in prayer and praise speaking good of his name; and this is indeed the proper use of our tongues; but alas, how horrid is that perversion of speech, when therewith curse we men, which are made after the similitude of God. Yet such is the inconsistence of some professors of religion, that out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing; worship in one breath, and then reviling, slandering, and backbiting in the next. My brethren, these things ought not so to be; such behaviour is utterly incongruous, and contradictory to the faith of the gospel. Doth a fountain send forth at the same place sweet water and bitter? Can the fig-tree, my brethren, bear olive-berries? either a vine figs? so can no fountain both yield salt water and fresh: and as impossible is it for a heart, in which true grace is implanted, to be guilty habitually of such gross inconsistencies.

13. [n] Who is a wise man, and endued with knowledge among you? let him shew out of a good conversation his works with meekness of wisdom. 14. But if ye have ° bitter envying and strife in your hearts, [p] glory not, and lie not

Verses 13—18. Nothing is more desirable than true wisdom. The apostle here teaches us,

1. In what way that will show itself. Who is a wise man and endued with knowledge amongst you? let him show out of a good conversation his works with meekness of wisdom, and prove his pretensions, not by arrogant boasts, but by his humility, meekness, holy conversation, and every good word and work, which may prove him a partaker of the grace of God in truth, and of the wisdom which maketh wise unto salvation.

2. A contrary conduct evidently demonstrates the folly and falsehood of pretended sophists. But if ye have bitter envying and strife in your hearts; live under the power of a contentious and disputing spirit, evident in the bitter words which proceed out of your mouths: glory not in any fancied attainments, or zeal for orthodoxy; and lie not against the truth, by pretending to contend for that to which your temper proves you an utter stranger. This wisdom descendeth not from above, and never had God for its author: but is earthly, in its principle and end; sensual, the offspring of the fallen nature; and devilish, the image of Satan, and cultivated by him to advance the interests of his kingdom; for where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work, that tends to ruin both our own souls, and all that are around us.

3. How different and lovely are the effects and influence of true wisdom! But the wisdom that is from above, coming down from the Father of lights, the gift of his grace to his peculiar people, is first pure, engaging us to all purity in doctrine, manners, temper, speech, and conduct; then peaceable, breathing nothing but love and quietness, averse to noisy broils and hot disputes, maintaining peace where it subsists, and seeking to heal every breach at which division hath entered. It is gentle, affable, courteous, engaging, ready to recede from its own in matters of property to avoid litigation; and mild, where in sentiment any difference subsists; never urging its own opinions with violence, willing patiently to hear the judgment of others: easy to be entreated, and ready to forgive every offence; not rigidly obstinate, but flexible to the advice of the wiser and more experienced: full of mercy and good fruits; benevolent, generous, liberal, willing to the utmost to help and relieve the distresses of the afflicted; without partiality, in judging or censuring others; without hypocrisy, speaking and acting always with simplicity and godly sincerity, without disguise or design. And the fruit of righteousness, even all the gracious produce above described, and eternal life hereafter, is sown in peace of them that make peace; they who are possessed of the peaceable wisdom above described, are the persons who go forth bearing the precious seed, and shall see in their own hearts, and under their ministry, the plenteous success of their labours both here and hereafter; for the work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance for ever.

CHAP. IV.—ANNO DOMINI, 60.

In this chapter we are directed to consider, 1. Some causes of contention besides those mentioned in the foregoing chapter, and to watch against them, ver. 1—3. 2. We are taught to abandon the friendship of this world, so as to submit and subject ourselves entirely to God, ver. 4—10. 3. All detraction and rash judgment of others is to be carefully avoided, ver. 11, 12. 4. We must preserve a constant regard, and pay the utmost deference to the disposal of divine providence, ver. 13. to the end.

Wherefore he saith, [i] God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble. 7. [k] Submit yourselves therefore to God. [l] Resist the devil, and he will flee from you. 8. Verses 1—10. Inordinate desire after earthly things is the usual ground of contention; against this therefore the apostle warns them.

1. He ascribes to this the wars and contentions which then were notorious among them. From whence come wars and fightings among you? which some suppose hath reference to the many seditions of the Jewish people against the Roman government; but rather refers to the contentions and lawsuits which were maintained by those who made profession of Christianity, and which were so unbecoming of the name they bore; come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members? Yes: to the pride and covetousness of your hearts do these owe their origin, and tend to the ruin of religion and the peace of the church, provoking God to withdraw his Spirit from you. Ye lust, and long to gratify your criminal passions, and have not what you grasp after: ye kill, impatient to inherit, and wishing those dead whom you expect to succeed; and desire to have, grasping covetously after abundance, and cannot obtain; disappointment blasts your pursuits: ye fight and war, contending fiercely for superiority, wealth, and victory: yet ye have not, your schemes and designs are defeated, because ye ask not, neglecting to seek counsel of God in your enterprises, and not desiring his direction and blessing. And if ye ask, ye receive not, because ye ask amiss; neither praying for right things, nor with a right view, but eager after earthly gain; that ye may consume it upon your lusts, not to employ it for God's glory and the good of mankind. Note, (1.) Nothing is more contrary to the spirit of Christianity than covetousness and fierce disputes. (2.) They who do not seek God's blessing, justly meet with disappointment in all their enterprises. (3.) To ask amiss is as bad as not to ask at all; nor may we expect an answer to those prayers which worldly-mindedness and selfishness, not God's glory, dictates.

2. He solemnly warns them against intimate connexion with the world that lieth in wickedness. Ye adulterers and adulteresses, whose affections are alienated from Christ, to whom ye were once in profession and baptism espoused; know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? all undue attachment to the pleasures, interests, honours of the world, and delight in the company of the worldly-minded, are utterly inconsistent with fidelity to God, and real friendship with him; nay, are virtually a profession of enmity against him. Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world, and at all events is resolved to keep fair with the men of the world, and to advance his interests here below, he is, and must be, the enemy of God. Do ye think that the scripture saith in vain, in many passages describing the deadly corruption of the natural heart, The spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth to envy? and, till renewed by grace, is ever with an evil eye regarding the superior prosperity and affluence of others, and grasping after the like abundance: this spirit must therefore be mortified, or we must be condemned with the world.

3. He directs them how to overcome the world. But he, even God, giveth more grace than the world can spread snares, and hath infinitely greater riches to bestow, than this poor earth can proffer. Wherefore he saith, God resisteth the proud, who make flesh their arm, and place their happiness and confidence in worldly things, vain of their own wisdom, riches, or attainments; these he fights against, blasts their designs, and ruins their confidences; but he giveth grace unto the humble, who, sensible of their own wretchedness, wants, and weakness, bow down at his feet for relief. Submit yourselves therefore to God, to his guidance and government, obedient to his will and word, resigned to his providence, and content with the portion which he allots you, whatever it be. Resist the devil, and he will flee from you, as a vanquished foe, unable to contend with those who have put on the whole armour of God, and appear resolved to fight manfully under Christ's banner. Draw nigh to God, in fervent prayer for help, and he will draw nigh to you with comfort, strength, and salvation in every time of need, and will make you more than conquerors.

4. He exhorts them to put away every evil thing, and with real penitence to return to God. Cleanse your hands, ye sinners, in the atoning blood of Jesus, that you may lift them up with acceptance before the throne of grace; and purify your hearts, ye double-minded, from pride, envy, covetousness, and hypocrisy; seeking that grace which can alone be effectual for this blessed purpose. Be afflicted, and mourn, and weep, over the deep corruption and sinfulness of your hearts, and under a sense of your past grievous departures from God. Let your laughter be turned to mourning, and your joy to heaviness, ashamed and confounded at your past baseness, ingratitude, and unfaithfulness to a dying Redeemer. Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, acknowledging your vileness, and imploring his pardoning grace and help; and he shall lift you up with the arms of his love, and recover you from your backsliding, restore you to his favour, and bring you at last to his presence and glory. Note, (1.) They who would find acceptance with God, must approach him as cleansed with atoning blood, and without hypocrisy desiring indeed to be received into the arms of his mercy. (2.) They who have unfaithfully departed from God, need with shame, remorse, and mourning, return to him, humbling their souls before him, that he may lift them up. (3.) None perish who cast themselves at the footstool of divine mercy; it is God's delight to revive the spirit of the humble, and to heal the broken-hearted.

11. [q] Speak not evil one of another, brethren. He that speaketh evil of his brother, and judgeth his brother, speaketh evil of the law, and judgeth the law: [r] but if thou judge the law, thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge. 12. [r] There is one lawgiver, who is able to save, and to destroy: [s] who art thou that judgest another? 13. [t] Go to now, ye that say, To-day or to-morrow we will go into such a city, and continue there a year, and buy, and sell, and get gain; 14. Whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow: [u] for what is your life? * It is even a vapour that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away. 15. For that ye ought to say, [x] If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this, or that. 16. [y] But now ye rejoice in your boastings: all such rejoicing is evil. 17. [z] Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin.

Verses 11—17. The former subject is here resumed, concerning the right government of the tongue; and we are,

1. Warned against all reviling and rash censure. Speak not evil one of another, brethren; inventing falsehoods, exposing the infirmities, publishing the failings, divulging the secrets, aggravating the offences, or detracting from the excellences of one another. He that speaketh evil of his brother, and judgeth his brother, in things which God hath left indifferent, speaketh evil of the law, and judgeth the law; arraigning the wisdom, equity, and goodness of the Lawgiver, as if he permitted what he ought to condemn; but if thou arrogantly judge the law, and pretend to decide what is fit to be enjoined, and what not, thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge. There is one lawgiver, who is able to save and to destroy; invested with supreme authority to enact laws, able to reward the faithful, and punish the disobedient. This is his prerogative; to invade it, is the highest insolence. Who art thou, a poor despicable, perishing worm, that judgest another, and darest thus to usurp the throne of God? Note, (1.) Where we cannot in conscience speak well of a person, it is our duty at least to be silent. (2.) Since God hath reserved that for himself to determine concerning men's everlasting state, and hath given us his law as our only rule of duty, it becomes us to make nothing sin, which he hath not declared to be evil; nor ought we to erect another court of judicature over our brethren, where men's opinions, not the word of God, is to decide.

2. He inculcates constant dependence upon divine providence. Go to now, ye who forget your entire dependence upon God's disposal of you, and that say, with self-sufficiency and disregard of him, To-day or to-morrow we will go into such a city, and continue there a year, and buy, and sell, and get gain, as if your time and the success of your enterprises, were in your own hands, and owing to your wisdom and diligence. Whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow, or whether you shall ever live to the rising of another sun. For what is your life? It is even a vapour that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away; so fleeting, so transitory, and every hour in jeopardy; the consideration of which should teach you to speak less confidently. For that ye ought to say, If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this, or that; adding this humble proviso, and owning your dependence for life, ability, or success in every enterprise, upon him, in whose hands your breath is, and whose are all your ways, Dan. v. 23. But now ye rejoice in your boastings, and talk as if you ceased to be creatures under the care and keeping of your great Creator. All such rejoicing in your own self-sufficiency is evil, most offensive to God, and bringing great guilt upon your souls. Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin; highly aggravated, as he wilfully opposes the dictates of his own conscience, and treasures up thereby wrath against the day of wrath. Note, (1.) In all our ways we should consider God, and in every undertaking beg his blessing and commit ourselves to his guidance. (2.) Our lives are fleeting things: we have not a moment we can call our own. It is folly to be planning schemes for years to come, when we know not what a day may bring forth. (3.) When we know better, and do worse, we are most inexcusable, and shall lie down under peculiar condemnation.

CHAP. V.—ANNO DOMINI, 64.

In this chapter the apostle denounces the judgments of God upon those rich men that oppress the poor, ver. 1—6. Hereupon all the faithful are exhorted to patience under their trials and sufferings, ver. 7—11. The sin of swearing is cautioned against, ver. 12. We are directed how to carry it, both under affliction, and in prosperity, ver. 13. Prayer for the sick, and anointing with oil are prescribed, ver. 14, 15. Christians are directed to acknowledge their faults one to another, and to pray one for another, and the efficacy of prayer is proved, ver. 16—18. And lastly; it is recommended to us to do what we can for the reducing of them that stray from the ways of truth.

1. GO [a] to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. 2. [b] Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. 3. [c] Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire: ye have heaped treasure together for the last days. 4. [d] Behold, the hire of the labourers, which have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of sabaoth. 5. [e] Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts, as in [f] a day of slaughter. 6. [g] Ye have condemned and killed the just; and he doth not resist you. 7. [h] * Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive [i] the early and latter rain. 8. [k] Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. 9. [l] Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned: [m] behold, the Judge standeth before the door. 10. Take, my brethren, the prophets, who have spoken in the name of the Lord, [n] for an example of suffering affliction, and of patience. 11. Behold, [o] we count them happy which endure. [p] Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the end of the Lord; that [q] the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy.

Verses 1—11. The apostle addresses himself,

1. To the rich oppressors. Go to now, ye rich men, whose portion is in this world only, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you, both temporal and eternal. Your riches are corrupted, your hoarded stores putrefy; and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered, laid by in useless bags; and the rust of them, which by time they have contracted like iron, shall be a witness against you, to upbraid your covetousness and avarice; and shall eat your flesh as it were fire, bring down divine vengeance upon your guilty heads; ye have heaped treasure together for the last day, to provide for distant years to come, but which will be a prey to the destroyers of your city and nation, and serve only to be a treasure of wrath against the day of wrath. Behold, the hire of the labourers which have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth against you for judgment, and the cries of them which have reaped, complaining of your injustice and oppression, are entered into the ears of the Lord of sabaoth, who will avenge their quarrel. Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth and been wanton: indulging every brutish appetite, and making provision for the flesh to fulfil the lusts thereof: ye have nourished your hearts as in a day of slaughter; faring sumptuously on the spoils of iniquity, fattening yourselves as beasts for the slaughter. Ye have condemned and killed the just, both the Lord himself, and many of his righteous servants; and he doth not resist you; meekly and patiently resigned to suffer. Note, (1.) Though wicked men prosper for a while, God keeps a strict account of all their ways and will bring them shortly into judgment for these things. (2.) Riches are to be used, not to be hoarded in bags, or barns, or wardrobes; then they prove a blessing, else they are only treasures of wrath. (3.) Though the poor may groan under the yoke of oppression without redress, there is one who heareth their appeal, and will vindicate their cause. (4.) Pleasure, luxury, and indulgence may for a while lull the sinner's soul asleep: but he will soon be awakened from his short-lived dream, and startled with the fearful looking-for of judgment, when too late he will begin to weep and howl in vain.

2. He addresses himself to the persecuted poor saints. (1.) Be patient, therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord, who will come, and will not tarry, to espouse your cause, and rescue you from the power of your oppressors. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain, expecting the desired harvest, when he hopes to reap the fruit of all his toils. Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh, when your redemption from every misery will be completed for ever. (2.) Grudge not one against another, brethren; groan not under your sufferings, through envy, fret-fulness, or desire of revenge; lest ye be condemned: behold, the judge standeth before the door; and that consideration should powerfully plead with you to wait with patience, and refer yourselves entirely to his determination. (3.) Take, my brethren, the prophets, who have spoken in the name of the Lord, faithfully discharging their commission, for an example of suffering affliction, and of patience, whose noble behaviour bravely imitate under the like persecutions. Behold, we count them happy which endure with meekness and resignation to the will of God, because their end must be peace and blessedness eternal. Ye have heard of the patience of Job, how eminently exemplary, and have seen the end of the Lord, the happy issue which God put to his troubles; or that perfect pattern of submission to the will of God which Jesus himself showed under all his sufferings: that the Lord is very pitiful and of tender mercy, sympathizing with his suffering saints, and delivering them out of all their afflictions. We need not therefore be discouraged under any cross; the victory is secured, and the end of it shall be our eternal glory.

12. [r] But, above all things, my brethren, swear not, neither by heaven, neither by the earth, neither by any other oath: but let your yea be yea; and your nay, nay; lest ye fall into condemnation. 13. [s] Is any among you afflicted? let him pray. Is any merry? [t] let him sing psalms. 14. Is any sick among you? let him call for the [u] elders of the church; and let them pray over him, [x] anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: 15. [y] And the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and [z] if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him. 16. [a] Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed. [b] The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much. 17. Elias was a man [c] subject to like passions as we are, and [d] he prayed † earnestly that it might not rain; and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months. 18. And he [e] prayed again, and the heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit. 19. Brethren, [f] if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him; 20. Let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way [g] shall save a soul from death, and shall [h] hide a multitude of sins.

Verses 12—20. The apostle here,

1. Warns them against all profane swearing. But above all things, my brethren, swear not, neither by heaven, neither by the earth, neither by any other oath: but let your yea be yea; and your nay, nay; except in solemn cases, where an appeal to God is lawful, never exceed a simple affirmation or denial in your conversation, lest you fall into condemnation, and bring guilt upon your souls. Note, Swearing is of all sins most unprofitable; and whilst it offers the highest affront to God, affords not even momentary pleasure to the offender.

2. He teaches them how to behave in adversity and prosperity. Is any among you afflicted? let him pray, humbly spreading his case before the Lord, that he may obtain the needful relief. Is any merry? in prosperous circumstances, and happy in his soul, let him sing psalms, and praise the gracious giver of every good gift.

3. Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord, as the symbol of miraculous power with which the elders were invested; and the prayer of faith shall save and recover the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, which may have brought such a visitation upon him, they shall be forgiven him. Note, The removal of sickness is a great mercy, but the pardon of sin still far greater, for which we are especially called upon to offer up our prayers.

4. Confess your faults one to another, and take shame to yourselves where you have offended your brother. Or if any thing lies particularly upon your conscience, communicate it to some pious friend, or able minister of Christ, and pray one for another over the sins you confess and bewail, that they may be healed, their guilt pardoned, and their power subdued.

5. He shows the great efficacy of prayer. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much; a memorable example of which we have in the case of Elias, who was a man subject to like passions as we are; liable, as other poor corrupted creatures, to many sinful infirmities; and he prayed earnestly, that it might not rain, as a punishment upon Ahab and rebellious Israel, and a means to convince them of the greatness of their sin; and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months; so long the land of Israel was parched with drought, and a severe famine followed. And he prayed again, and the heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit; and as the effect of Elijah's prayer was so wonderful, we may comfortably be assured, that when we like him pray with faith and fervency, our prayers too shall receive an answer of peace.

6. He concludes with warmly recommending a zeal for the conversion of men's souls. Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, in principle or in practice backsliding from Christ, and one convert him, recovering him back again to the great Shepherd's fold; let him know, that he which converteth a sinner from the error of his ways, shall save a soul from death, preventing that eternal ruin which must otherwise have ensued, and shall hide a multitude of sins, which, when the sinner is converted, shall be forgiven and blotted out, as well as be a means of preventing all the evil which must have ensued from his ill example and influence. Note, (1.) Nothing is so valuable an acquisition as an immortal soul: one such won to Christ is better than the riches of both the Indies. (2.) They who truly turn to God, will have a vail of eternal oblivion cast on their past offences: they shall be remembered no more. (3.) Death eternal, of body and soul, is the wages of sin; and unless we are saved from it now, we must be undone for ever.

A PRACTICAL COMMENT

UPON THE

FIRST EPISTLE GENERAL

PETER.

Introduction.

TWO epistles we have enrolled in the sacred canon of the scripture, written by Peter, an eminent apostle of Jesus Christ. The design of this first epistle is, 1. To explain more fully the doctrines of Christianity to these newly converted Jews. 2. To direct and persuade them to a holy conversation, in the faithful discharge of all personal and relative duties, whereby they would secure their own peace, and effectually confute the slanders and reproaches of their enemies. 3. To prepare them for sufferings: This seems to be his principal intention; for he hath something to this purpose in every chapter, and doth by a great variety of arguments, encourage them to patience and perseverance in the faith, lest the persecution and sad calamities that were coming upon them should prevail with them to apostatize from Christ and the gospel.

CHAP. I.—ANNO DOMINI, 65.

In which the apostle describes the persons to whom he writes, and salutes them, ver. 1, 2. Blessing God for their regeneration to a lively hope of eternal salvation, ver. 3—5. In the hopes of which salvation he shows they had great cause of rejoicing, though for a little while they were in heaviness and affliction for the trial of their faith, which would produce joy unspeakable and full of glory, ver. 6—9. This is that salvation which the ancient prophets foretold, and the angels desired to look into, ver. 10—12. He exhorteth them to sobriety and holiness, which he presseth from the consideration of the blood of Jesus, the invaluable price of man's redemption, ver. 13—20. And to brotherly love, from the consideration of their regeneration and the excellency of their spiritual state, ver. 22—25.

1. [a] PETER, an apostle of Jesus Christ, to [b] the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia; 2. [c] Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, [d] through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and [e] sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ: [f] Grace unto you, and peace, be multiplied.

Verses 1, 2, This epistle opens with,

1. The writer's name and title; Peter, an apostle of Jesus Christ, by his immediate appointment, and sent especially to the circumcision.

2. The persons to whom it is addressed: To the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia; dispersed by various providences through these provinces, and now called to the faith of Christ; elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, who from eternity designed you for salvation, as the objects whom his sovereign grace was pleased to choose; through sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience, this blessed author of all grace effectually calling and converting your souls to the love and practice of true holiness, and leading you to the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ, for pardon and peace with God, which only by the sacrifice of the Redeemer could be obtained. Note, (1.) God hath an elect, whom before worlds were, he determined to bring unto glory. (2.) These in the fulness of time are called to faith in a Redeemer, and, as miserable sinners, apply to the blood of sprinkling for the pardon of their iniquities. (3.) The Spirit of God sanctifies all those whom the Father chooses, and prepares them for the inheritance which is prepared for them.

3. The salutation: Grace unto you, and peace be multiplied; may the pardoning, sealing, sanctifying, comforting, preserving grace of our God be with you: and peace, the blessed effect thereof, be diffused in the church, your families, and in your own souls. Note, We need nothing more to make us happy, than grace and peace; and if we possess all the world beside, and lack these, we are poor and miserable.

Verses 3—9. The apostle begins,

1. With thanksgiving for the inestimable blessings which through the gospel they enjoyed. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who according to his abundant mercy, without the least respect to our deserts, of his sovereign grace hath begotten us again unto a lively hope, when we had nothing in prospect before us but misery and despair, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, who was delivered for our offences, and raised again for our justification, that we, beholding in him the justice of God satisfied, might be emboldened to approach a reconciled God, and not only by his grace be quickened to newness of life here, but be entitled also to an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, prepared by eternal love, and sure to every one of his redeemed, who are kept not by your own strength or sufficiency, but the power of God, engaged to protect you from all your enemies, and to preserve you, through faith of his operation in your hearts, unto salvation completed in glory, and which is ready to be revealed in the last time, when Jesus shall appear, and take his faithful followers to their eternal mansions of blessedness above. Note, (1.) We can never enough be thankful, when we remember the abundant mercy of our God and Father in Jesus Christ to our sinful souls. (2.) Every blessing flows from boundless and unmerited grace. (3.) The resurrection of Jesus from the dead is the grand foundation of our hope; and it is a lively hope, animating the soul to patience, purity, and perseverance, and never faileth till it is swallowed up in fruition. (4.) Heaven, with all its glories, is our inheritance; our title is secured, nay, possession is taken by the forerunner for us entered. (5.) Whatever enemies, snares, dangers, temptations, beset us in our way to heaven, we shall be more than conquerors, if God be our keeper, and if he implants true faith in our hearts, which never faileth. (6.) The time is short ere all the promises shall receive their accomplishment, and our salvation be perfected for ever.

2. Having mentioned the salvation which was in prospect, he shows how that afforded comfort and support under all their trials. Wherein ye greatly rejoice, looking forward and upward to your glorious hope, though now for a season, (if need be) ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations, which though you cannot but feel as men, you can rejoice under them as Christians: and they are sent, that the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold which perisheth, though it be tried in the fire, may be found unto praise, and honour, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ, when its purity, genuineness, and excellence, shall be acknowledged, brightened, and strengthened, by all the conflicts it hath sustained in the Saviour's service, whom having not seen, ye love, with fervent and supreme affection, faith realizing his amiableness to your souls; in whom, though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory, the lively foretaste of the eternal bliss; receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls, begun already, and to be completed shortly in glory. Note, (1.) A Christian hath cause of rejoicing in God and the hope set before him at all times, and even in the midst of grief and trouble this consolation the world cannot take away. (2.) Though our lot as Christians in this world is manifold temptations, and our nature cannot but groan under the burden, yet we must remember there is a need be for every pang we feel, and that will reconcile us to them. (3.) The bitterest afflictions to flesh and blood are often the most profitable medicines to our souls; and when we come to glory we shall see that these were indeed blessings in disguise. (4.) The trial of our faith tends to its confirmation and establishment; and, like gold, when tortured in the furnace, we come forth from our troubles the brighter, and leave the dross of corruption behind. (5.) Fidelity will be crowned when Jesus shall appear, and all our trials then will end in immortal honour and eternal glory. (6.) Jesus is precious to the believing soul; and the realizing views of him, which faith presents, bring down the foretastes of heavenly blessedness.

10. [t] Of which salvation the prophets have enquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you: 11. Searching what, or what manner of time [u] the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, [x] when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow. 12. Unto whom it was revealed, [y] that not unto themselves, but unto us, they did minister the things which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you [z] with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; [a] which things the angels desire to look into.

Verses 10—12. The salvation of the gospel, on which their faith fixed, was that which the blessed prophets had foretold, and after which they earnestly inquired. Of which salvation the prophets have inquired and searched diligently, into the meaning of their own prophecies which by inspiration they delivered, digging deep into the golden mine, that themselves might share the treasure; who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you through the incarnate Saviour: searching with eagerness, what, or what manner of time, the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ for the sins of his people, and the glory that should follow, when, having offered his one atonement, he should ascend to the throne of the Majesty on high. They wished to know the exact time, and what would be the state of the world, when this great event should come to pass. Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us, did they minister; the events predicted were not to be fulfilled in their days, but ours; and they foretold the things which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you, with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, who by his miraculous operations, and by the communication of his gifts and graces, bears his sacred testimony to the truth of our report: which things the angels desire to look into, bending forward as the cherubims over the mercy-seat, with wonder and delight contemplating the glories of gospel-grace, admiring and adoring. Note, (1.) The mysteries of gospel-grace were not only the subject which engaged the holy prophets' researches, but they afford matter for angelic contemplation, wonder, and praise. (2.) The word of God must be searched, and diligently examined: there are treasures hid in it which will abundantly repay our pains. (3.) The Holy Ghost sent down from heaven still continues to make the gospel effectual to our salvation, and on his mighty operation all the success of our preaching depends.

13. Wherefore [b] gird up the loins of your mind, [c] be sober, and hope ‡ to the end, for the [d] grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ; 14. Verses 13—21. From the foregoing consideration the apostle,

1. Enforces the practice of true godliness in sundry particulars. Wherefore, (1.) Gird up the loins of your mind, be disentangled from every thing in the world which would retard you in your heavenly course, and be strong in the Lord and the power of his might to fight the good fight of faith. (2.) Be sober, temperately using every creature-comfort, and with holy vigilance preparing for the Master's return. And, (3.) Hope unto the end, never dismayed nor discouraged by the temptations to which you may be exposed, but patiently persevering, and confidently waiting for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ, when the work of grace shall be completed, and an eternity of glory succeed; the hope of which, as an anchor of the soul, will enable us to ride out every storm. (4.) Behave as obedient children to your heavenly Father, dutiful in observing his commands, and submitting to his disposal and correction; not fashioning yourselves according to the former lusts in your ignorance, not conformed to the corrupt manners, maxims, and pursuits of a world which lieth in wickedness, among whom we all had our conversation in time past, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind, and knowing not the dreadful ruin which hung over our heads. To these ways let us never return; but as he who hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation, proposing to yourselves nothing short of his complete and perfect image, and in every state, condition, and circumstance, desiring that your hearts, lips, and lives, may exactly correspond with his holy will: because it is written in that word which is our eternal rule of duty, Be ye holy, for I am holy. (5.) Maintain a holy jealousy over yourselves. And if, as becometh your profession, ye call in ceaseless prayer on the Father for that grace which alone can enable you for all that he commands, who, without respect of persons, judgeth according to every man's work, and thereby proves whether they are obedient children or not; pass the time of your sojourning here in fear, in filial fear of offending God, and holy jealousy over your own hearts, knowing that your present state is your pilgrimage, and that, if you are faithful, you shall shortly reach the happy rest, where all your fears will end, and your felicity be completed for ever.

2. To encourage and engage them to the practice which he recommends, he suggests the most powerful motives. Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation, from the foolish traditions and corrupt manners and ways received by tradition from your fathers; to redeem you from which, all the perishing treasures of this world would be a price too despicable to be mentioned: but an infinitely greater hath been paid for you; ye are redeemed with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish, and without spot, who offered himself as your ransom to God, pure from all defilement, a lamb fit to bleed on God's altar, and of such transcendent dignity in his person as to add infinite value to his sacrifice. Who verily was fore-ordained before the foundation of the world, by an eternal decree, to be the one great propitiation; but was manifested in these last times for you, becoming incarnate, and making the brightest displays of the glory of his grace, who by him do believe in God as your reconciled and covenant God, that raised him from the dead, in testimony of his acceptance of the sacrifice which he had offered for our justification, and gave him glory, exalting him to the mediatorial throne; that your faith and hope might be in God, assured, through the Divine Messiah, of present favour and acceptance with him, and expecting, according to his promise, all the blessings of grace here and of glory hereafter.

22. Seeing ye have [t] purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit, unto [u] unfeigned love of the brethren; see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently: 23. [x] Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth

Verses 22—25. The apostle proceeds,

1. To inculcate the exercise of fervent charity. Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit, and have so graciously begun to advance in all holiness of heart and temper, being led by him especially unto unfeigned love of the brethren; see therefore that, under his blessed influences and according to the gospel word, ye love one another with a pure heart fervently, with still increasing and more enlarged affection: being born again, and made partakers of a divine nature, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God which liveth and abideth for ever, unchangeably the same, and communicating a dignity and honour to which the highest human pedigree cannot pretend. Note, (1.) The gospel truth, through the Spirit embraced and obeyed, is the effectual means of purifying the soul. (2.) Unfeigned love of the brethren is among the surest evidences of the Spirit's work upon the heart. (3.) They who have made the highest advancements in the divine life have need be exhorted to increase more and more. (4.) If we have received the ingrafted word into our souls, we have a divine principle which shall live and abide for ever, till it is perfected in glory.

2. He sets forth the vanity of man. All flesh is grass, weak and perishing: and all the glory of man, his pomp, wealth, affluence, wisdom, and endowments of every kind, are as the flower of grass, that soon fades and decays, the grass withereth and the flower thereof falleth away; one stroke of sickness, or accident, or the ravages of age, make all human greatness droop, and death carries it to the grave: but the word of the Lord endureth for ever, and they who are begotten by it have in their hearts eternal life begun. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you, whose effects are so everlastingly blessed. Note, A deep sense of the vanity of man, and of his present state of corruption, will serve greatly to draw off our minds from the trifles of time, to look to the abiding glories of eternity which in the gospel are revealed unto us.

CHAP. II.—ANNO DOMINI, 60.

The general exhortation to holiness is continued and enforced by several reasons taken from the foundation on which Christians are built, Jesus Christ, and from their spiritual blessings and privileges in him, ver. 1—12. Particular directions are given how subjects ought to obey the magistrates, and servants their masters, patiently suffering in well doing, in imitation of Christ.

1. WHEREFORE, [a] [b] laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings, 2. [c] As new born babes, desire, [d] the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby: 3. If so be ye have [e] tasted that the Lord is gracious. 4. To whom coming, as unto [f] a living [g] stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God and precious, 5. Ye also, [h] as lively stones, * are built up a spiritual house, [i] an holy priesthood, to offer up [k] spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ. 6. Wherefore also it is contained in the scripture, [l] Behold, I lay in Sion a chief corner-stone, elect, precious: and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded. 7. [m] Unto you therefore which believe he is † precious: but unto them which be disobedient, [n] the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner, 8. And a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence, even to them which stumble at the word, being disobedient; [o] whereunto also they were appointed. 9. But [p] ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, ‡ a peculiar people; [q] that ye should shew forth the || praises of him [r] who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light: 10. [s] Which in time past were not a people, but are now the people of God: which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy.

Verses 1—10. The apostle proceeds,

1. To exhort the Hebrews to show a temper suitable to their profession. Wherefore laying aside all malice, every thing spiteful, envious, and revengeful; and all guile, every thing deceitful in word or behaviour; and hypocrisies, whether in the profession of religion towards God, or in pretences of respect and friendship towards men; and envies, repining at the prosperity of others; and all evil speakings, which proceed from these vile tempers in the heart: in opposition to all which, as new born babes desire the sincere milk of the word, the pure unadulterated gospel, that ye may grow thereby in every divine and holy temper, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ: if so be, or forasmuch as, ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious, experimentally proving the richness of his mercy, and having begun to enjoy a sweet savour of that grace, which, though but a taste compared with what it shall be, is yet so precious and reviving. Note, (1.) All malice, guile, hypocrisy, and slander, are direct contradictions to the Christian character. (2.) By nature all evil cleaves to us closer than our garments; but it must be put off as filthy rags, if we mean with comfort to appear in the presence of God. (3.) The word of God supplies milk for babes, and strong meat for men; and they who feel an appetite for it verily shall be fed and nourished up in the words of sound doctrine. (4.) The grace which is in Jesus Christ is rich and free to the poorest and most miserable sinner, and to those who have tasted of it he will indeed be precious.

2. He describeth that blessed Jesus, the true foundation of the sinner's hope, of whose grace they had been made partakers. To whom coming by faith, as unto a living stone, even Christ, who is the only foundation, everlasting, durable, and never to be shaken; a living stone, the head of vital influence, and communicating to all his members life and stability; disallowed indeed of men, rejected and slighted by the Jewish rulers, and all unbelievers, who will not come to him that they may have life: but chosen of God and precious, appointed by him from eternity to bear the massy structure of his church, as most excellent in himself, and most able to exalt the glory of God, and to secure the salvation of his redeemed. Coming therefore to him, ye also, as lively stones, animated by virtue of union with him, are built up a spiritual house, in which God the Spirit is pleased to take up his blessed abode; a holy priesthood, consecrated for God's immediate service, and devoted to his glory; not to offer up the blood of beasts, but the better spiritual sacrifices of your bodies, souls, and spirits, in prayer and praise, which are acceptable to God by Jesus Christ. Note, (1.) Every child of God is the temple of the Deity, where his Spirit abidingly dwells. (2.) They who reject Christ as their foundation, must build on the sand, and be swept away by the deluge of wrath. (3.) All Christians are consecrated as priests to God, and must approve their peculiar relation to him by their unreserved devotedness to his service.

3. He supports what he had advanced by the testimony of Isaiah. Wherefore also it is contained in the scripture, Behold, with wonder, love, and praise, behold, I lay in Sion, in my holy mountain, a chief corner stone, the great Messiah, on whom all his people's hopes are built; elect, and chosen for this blessed purpose, to unite Jews and Gentiles, and the whole body of the redeemed, in one glorious church; precious in my sight, and who should be above all things dear to those who are grounded on him as their foundation: and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded, neither here nor hereafter; having confidence, through a Redeemer's blood and righteousness, to approach a throne of grace, and boldness to appear before a throne of glory. Unto you therefore which believe he is precious; Jesus is inexpressibly amiable in your eyes, you count your relation to him the highest honour, and firmly trust your everlasting hopes upon him: but unto them which be disobedient and unbelieving, as another scripture observes, the stone which the builders, the Jewish priests and rulers, disallowed and rejected, the same, as was foretold, is made the head of the corner, exalted to the greatest honour, and setting up his gospel church in defiance of their enmity and opposition. And, as Isaiah in another place prophesies, he is become a stone of stumbling and a rock of offence, even to them which stumble at the word, and through pride and prejudice, unable to bear the humbling manner in which the Messiah appeared, and the doctrines which he taught, being disobedient and infidel, having rejected him as the promised hope of Israel, and split upon this rock; whereunto also they were appointed, according to God's sovereignty and righteous judgment. Note, (1.) Faith in Jesus will prevent all shame; the hope founded upon him shall never fail us, either in time or eternity. (2.) Christ is indeed precious to the believer, so precious, that, compared with the excellency of the knowledge of him, he counts all things beside but dung and loss. (3.) They who disbelieve the gospel, and disobey God's word, rush on their ruin, and must suffer shipwreck in eternity.

4. He reminds them of the rich and invaluable blessings and privileges which in the Redeemer they had obtained. But ye are a chosen generation, elect to infinitely greater privileges than those which the visible church of Israel enjoyed; a royal priesthood, having an unction from the Holy One, and made kings and priests unto God, Rev. i. 6. victorious over your spiritual foes, separated for God, and to reign with him in glory for ever; a holy nation, consecrated to the Lord, and in spirit and temper conformed to his image; a peculiar people, in a nobler sense than ever Israel was of old, appointed to the highest dignity, and enriched with the most distinguishing blessings; that ye should show forth the praises of him, who, by his grace, hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light of gospel truth, brought from the cloudy dispensation of legal institutions into that bright day, which the Sun of Righteousness makes, arisen with healing in his wings. Which in time past were not a people, having been disowned and divorced of God, Hos. i. 9, 10. ii. 23. but are now the people of God, through Jesus admitted into the covenant of grace, and acknowledged as the Lord's: which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy, even pardon, grace, and all the blessings of eternal redemption.

11. Dearly beloved, I beseech you, [r] as strangers and pilgrims, [u] abstain from fleshly lusts, which [x] war against the soul; 12. [y] Having your conversation honest among the Gentiles: that, [*] [z] whereas they speak against you as evil-doers, [a] they may by your good works, which they shall behold, glorify God in the day of visitation. 13. Verses 11—17. Whilst they are in the flesh, the best of men, have need be warned and exhorted to work out their own salvation with fear and trembling. The apostle therefore admonishes them,

1. To guard against all worldly and carnal affections. Dearly beloved, I beseech you, as becomes strangers and pilgrims, for such you profess yourselves to be upon the earth, abstain from fleshly lusts, subduing every inordinate appetite and every covetous desire, which war against the soul, and threaten its defilement and destruction; having your conversation honest among the Gentiles, adorning your profession by every thing commendable and excellent; that whereas they speak against you as evil doers, and misrepresent you as a wicked, refractory, and lawless people, they may be confuted by your good works, which they shall behold, and be ashamed of their unjust aspersions, compelled to glorify God in the day of visitation, either when in a day of judgment he shall punish them for their ill usage of you, or in mercy, when turning the hearts of the disobedient to the wisdom of the just, he shall lead them to approve and imitate your good conversation.

2. To be obedient to magistrates. Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake, under whatever form of government you live, or whoever they be whom the Divine Providence sets over you: whether it be to the king, as supreme; or unto governors, as unto them that are sent by him, and bear his commission, for the punishment of evil doers, and for the praise of them that do well; from whom faithful and obedient subjects have nothing to fear, have every thing to hope for. For so is the will of God, that with well-doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men, by your loyalty and cheerful submission to the civil government, confuting the calumnies of those who would brand you as seditious: as free indeed from the tyranny of sin, Satan, and the curse of the law, and not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness, to cover any treasonable design, or other malignant evil, but as the servants of God, conscientiously observant of his holy will in all things, and obedient to magistrates, not only for wrath but also for conscience' sake.

3. He adds four short but important precepts. Honour all men according to their rank and station. Love the brotherhood, high or low, rich or poor; bear them an unfeigned regard as members of Christ, show it in every act of kindness to their bodies or their souls. Fear God with all reverence and filial awe of offending. Honour the king, as his representative upon earth, and governing by his authority.

Verses 18—25. As the Jews very hardly bore a foreign yoke, as unwilling were they to submit to any Gentile masters; and those of them who believed in Christ were by their Judaizing teachers persuaded to think that they owed no obedience to unbelieving masters. To correct so dangerous an imagination, the apostle,

1. Inculcates the duty of servants. Be subject to your masters, with all fear and reverence, and be obedient to all their lawful commands; not only to the good and gentle, but also to the froward, if such is your lot to be placed under their power. For this is thankworthy, a matter of real commendation, and a singular gift of God, if a man for conscience toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully, and bearing patiently the ill usage of a cruel master, to whom he hath given no just cause of provocation. For what glory is it, if when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? this can bring no credit to your religion, you receive but the just reward of your deeds. But if, when ye do well, faithful to your trust, and true to your profession, and suffer for your conscientious regard to God and his service, ye take it patiently, with all meekness, and without murmuring, this is acceptable to God, and a sure proof of the truth of his grace in your hearts. Note, (1.) The spirit of independence, which is in men, hardly brooks subjection, and correction still less. (2.) Patient suffering for well doing is our distinguished honour. (3.) Though the duty of servants is submission, yet their guilt is not the less who abuse their authority over them; and they will find a Master shortly, who will call them to account, with whom there is no respect of persons.

2. He enforces what he had enjoined with the most powerful arguments. For even hereunto were ye called. The cross every Christian must be content to bear: and we should the more readily take it up, because Christ also suffered for us as our substitute, and to make atonement for us, or for you, as many copies read; for the meanest servant as well as for the highest of the sons of men; leaving us an example of patience and long-suffering under all the most cruel and unjust treatment which he met with, that ye should follow his steps, and be conformed to his blessed pattern; who, grievously as he suffered, yet did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth; his bitterest enemies could not so much as fix upon him the shadow of a crime: who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; but observed an admirable silence, as the sheep before her shearers is dumb: when he suffered, he threatened not, nor discovered the least anger at his tormentors; but committed himself and his cause to him that judgeth righteously, and to whom vengeance belongeth: who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, submitting, as our surety, with his own blood to pay the penalty due to our iniquities; that we, being dead to sin, as crucified with him, should live unto righteousness, quickened by his Spirit to newness of life; by whose stripes ye were healed, and the deadly wounds of your souls, far worse than those which the most cruel masters can make in your bodies, were cured by the sovereign balm of that blood which streams from his scourgings. For ye were as sheep going astray, foolish, disobedient, deceived, in time past; but are now by grace recovered, and returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls, the blessed and adored Jesus. Note, (1.) Christ's example should animate us with cheerfulness to take up every cross which in his providence he is pleased to lay upon us. (2.) Our sufferings, however cruel or unjust, will never be an excuse for our impatience under them, or for any anger toward the instruments of them, however wicked or unreasonable. (3.) All the sins of the redeemed were laid upon the Saviour: on the tree he bore them. There never will be one sin pardoned, but those whose price were then paid: there never will be one sin remembered any more against those whose surety he then appeared. (4.) The doctrine of imputation is inculcated in both testaments; nor can it be more strange that we should be justified by Christ's righteousness, than that we should be healed by his stripes. (5.) All whose sins he bore are raised from the death of sin unto the life of righteousness. We are deceived, if we live in our iniquities and flatter ourselves with hope in Christ. (6.) By nature, by practice, we have all gone far astray. Reader, art thou then returned, by faith in the atoning blood, to the great Shepherd of souls? Art thou under his government, and dost thou tread in the footsteps of his flock?

Wherein the apostle describes the duties of husbands and wives, ver. 1—7. He exhorts Christians to unity, love, compassion, peace, and patience under sufferings; to oppose the slanders of their enemies, not by returning evil for evil, or railing for railing, but by a blessing; by a ready account of their faith and hope, and by keeping a good conscience, ver. 8—17. To encourage them to this, he proposeth the example of Christ, who suffered, the just for the unjust, but yet punished the old world for their disobedience, and saved the few that were faithful in the days of Noah.

[f] For after this manner in the old time the holy women also, who trusted in God, adorned themselves, being in subjection unto their own husbands: 6. [g] Even as Sara obeyed Abraham, calling him lord: [h] whose * daughters ye are as long as ye do well, [i] and are not afraid with any amazement. 7. [k] Likewise, ye husbands, dwell with them according to knowledge, giving honour unto the wife, as unto the weaker vessel, and as being heirs together of the grace of life; [l] that your prayers be not hindered.

Verses 1—7. The apostle proceeds to the duty of husbands and wives.

1. The duty of wives. Likewise, ye wives, be in subjection to your own husbands, whether Christian, Jewish, or heathen, regarding them as your superiors by creation and the ordinance of God; that, if any obey not the word, and are yet strangers to the faith of Christ, they also may without the word, though they should refuse to attend the preaching of the gospel, be won by the conversation of the wives, struck with your exemplary, engaging, and amiable conduct, while they behold your chaste conversation, circumspect in every word and action, and your chastity coupled with fear, showing them that reverence, attention, desire to please, and fear to offend, which cannot but attract their notice, and gain their high esteem. Whose adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; not making dress and finery your study, expensive, negligent of your family concerns, or desirous to attract others' eyes besides your husband's; but whilst careful of modest neatness of person, most careful of that which will render you above all other things amiable in their eyes, putting on the hidden man of the heart, the adornings of grace, truth, and holiness; in that which is not corruptible, and infinitely preferable to the poor and fading splendour of gay apparel, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, gentle, mild, tractable, silencing every rising of anger, and the emotions of fretfulness, which is the great secret of happiness in a married state, and in the sight of God of great price, and highly approved by him. For after this manner in the old time the holy women also who trusted in God adorned themselves, being in subjection unto their own husbands, delighting in their station, and never desiring to invert or change God's established order; even as Sarah obeyed Abraham with all dutiful subjection, calling him Lord, and paying him due reverence and respect as her superior: whose daughters ye are, in a spiritual sense, as long as ye do well, and copy her meek, dutiful, and humble example, and are not afraid with any amazement, not terrified from your duty by any menaces, not obedient through slavish fear of your husbands, but from the nobler principles of love and duty. Note, Wives should seriously consider this word of God, and make conscience of observing it: the advice is of infinite importance, not only to their comfort in this world, but is essential to all their hopes in a better.

2. The duty of husbands. Likewise, ye husbands, dwell with them according to knowledge, delighting in their company, their persons, their conversation; with purity and tender affection discharging every duty of the conjugal state; giving honour unto the wife, treating her with respect, making her your bosom friend, consulting her comfort and happiness, providing in the best manner for her which your circumstances will afford, bearing with and concealing her infirmities, considering her as the weaker vessel, to whom peculiar delicacy and tenderness is due, and as your equal in all Christian privileges, being heirs together of the grace of life; that your prayers be not hindered, or the effects of them defeated, as they must be by unchristian strifes, or austerity. Let those who bear the honoured name of husband then remember the duties of their station. Such a conduct will engage affection and submission, and supersede the exercise of authority.

8. Finally, [m] be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another; † love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous: 9. [n] Not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing; but contrariwise blessing; knowing that [o] ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing. 10. For [p] he that will love life and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile: 11. Let him [q] eschew evil, and do good: let him seek peace, and ensue it. 12. [r] For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers: but the face of the Lord is ‡ [s] against them that do evil. 13. [t] And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good? 14. [u] But and if ye suffer for righteousness' sake, happy are ye: and [x] be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled; 15. But [y] sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always [z] to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and ‖ fear: 16. [a] Having a good conscience; that, whereas they speak evil of you, as of evil doers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ. 17. [b] For it is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well doing, than for evil doing.

Verses 8—17. The apostle passes on to more general exhortations.

1. He enjoins the exercise of Christian charity. Finally, be ye all of one mind, united in the great points of Christian doctrine, and harmonizing in mutual affection; having compassion one of another, bearing with tender sympathy each other's burdens; love as brethren, out of a pure heart, fervently; be pitiful of each other's wants, weakness, and infirmities; be courteous, obliging, friendly, condescending: not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing, however cruelly or unkindly treated by professed enemies or pretended friends; but contrariwise, blessing, praying for those who most dispitefully use you; knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing, both temporal, spiritual, and eternal, which promise God hath annexed to such a gracious conduct. Note, To love those who are kind to us, is in some sort but natural; but to love our enemies, and return their bitterness with blessings, this is the work of supernatural grace.

2. Having mentioned the blessing which they should inherit, who walked according to the rule laid down, he quotes a passage from the Book of Psalms, showing the way to a truly happy life. For he that will love life, and see good days of prosperity and comfort in this world, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile, sincere in all his conversation, without dissimulation, and cautious, never to offer a rash, hasty, or passionate expression; let him eschew and avoid evil of every kind, which misery, as its shadow, ever attends; and do good to all, according to his abilities and opportunities; let him seek peace, as the richest acquisition, and ensue it, using every lawful means to preserve inviolate in all his connections and relations, and to heal every breach which may be made. For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, observing, approving, and directing them in all their holy conversation; and his ears are open to their prayers, regarding every request they make, and ready to fulfil all their petitions; but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil, with frowns of righteous indignation he beholds their crooked ways, and winged vengeance cuts off the remembrance of them from the earth; see Psalm xxxiv. 16. Note, (1.) Godliness hath the promise of this life, as well as of that which is to come. (2.) What an encouragement have we to approach a throne of grace, when God assures us of his constant attention to our prayers? (3.) They who persist in their iniquities must perish without remedy.

3. He suggests the most encouraging motives for their patient suffering. And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good? What have you to fear from men, or devils, if God be on your side? And will not such an inoffensive conduct disarm even your very enemies? But and if ye suffer for righteousness' sake, and your religion exasperates your persecutors, happy are ye in this honourable cross, and be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled at any of their menaces, frowns, or cruelty; but sanctify the Lord God in your hearts; set him before you, that, filled with holy fear of offending him, relying on his power, faithfulness, wisdom, and mercy, you may defy all the impotent wrath of men, and be ready always to give an answer, and to make your defence and apology to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear, with all dispassionate calmness and holy reverence of God, whose cause you plead; or this may refer to him that asketh the reason of their Christian hope; if he appears with meekness and fear, willing to hear your defence, then faithfully deliver your souls; having a good conscience towards God and towards men; and acting so uprightly and irreproachably, that whereas they speak evil of you as of evil-doers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ, and let your lives give the lie to their slanders, and turn them to their own confusion. For it is better, if the will of God be so that ye are appointed to suffer, that ye suffer for well-doing than for evil-doing, for it is bitter indeed when sin and suffering meet together, the burden is then grievously insupportable. Note, (1.) To suffer for righteousness' sake is our honour and happiness. (2.) The more we live in the fear of God, the less shall we be influenced by the fear of men. (3.) We never need be ashamed of our principles, but should readily and freely vindicate them, whenever we can gain an attentive hearing. (4.) The purest innocence is not a defence from the aspersions of malice. (5.) The surest way to confound the slanders of malevolence is to live them down.

18. For Christ also hath [c] once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, [d] being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit: 19. Verses 18—22. We have here,

1. The example Christ proposed as our encouragement to suffer patiently for him. For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, he who was perfectly pure and holy giving himself a sacrifice for us, to bear the sins of such polluted wretches as we are, that, having made a perfect and full satisfaction to Divine Justice, and obtained reconciliation through his own blood, he might bring us to God, into a state of favour and acceptance with him, being put to death in the flesh, and suffering in his human nature the penalty of sin, but quickened by the Spirit, by that eternal Spirit of the Son of God, which had taken the human nature into union with himself; or by the Holy Ghost, who is one in operation and agency with the Son. Note, (1.) The sufferings of Jesus were the real penalty due to our iniquities, and God laid them upon him in all their bitterness. (2.) He was the just one; had he not been so, he could not have satisfied for the unjust. (3.) By the sufferings of Jesus, sinners have access to and acceptance with God. (4.) If he voluntarily endured so much for us, shall we shrink from any cross which we may be called to bear for him?

2. He mentions what Christ did in the old world. By which also he went and preached unto the spirits which are now in prison, by his Spirit enlightening Noah, and sending him forth as a preacher of righteousness to them, which sometime were disobedient, and would neither believe nor attend to the warnings which Christ sent them, when once the long-suffering of God waited, during a hundred and twenty years, in the days of Noe, while the ark was a preparing, who continued preaching and building that immense structure which was a living sermon to them, wherein few, that is, eight souls, were saved by water, passing safely through the deluge which covered the earth, whilst the rest of the world perished in the waters, and went down into the prison of hell. The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us, as the antitype of the ark, not the mere external ordinance, the applying water to the body for the putting away of the filth of the flesh, which of itself could be of no avail, but as the outward visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace, even the answer of a good conscience towards God, pledging our fidelity to him in return for the privileges to which we are admitted, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ, who is the author of our life and salvation, being raised for our justification, the head of vital influence to his people, and shall raise them up at the last day. Note, (1.) God warns before he strikes. (2.) Though he is long-suffering, he will not always bear with sinners. (3.) They who reject the counsel of God against their own souls, have themselves only to blame for their destruction. (4.) Few ever were or will be saved in any age. (5.) Baptism saveth, not as a mere ceremony performed, but as a seal of that covenant which is established through a Redeemer, and a symbol of that grace, which out of his fulness we have received.

3. Christ is now exalted to the throne of majesty on high. Who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God, angels, and authorities, and powers, being made subject unto him; he is possessed of universal dominion, appointed to be head over all things to his church; and whatever any of his members may endure, he will support and bring them safely through; and, as surely as they suffer with him, they shall reign with him.

CHAP. IV.—ANNO DOMINI, 60.

The work of a Christian is twofold, doing the will of God, and suffering his pleasure. This chapter directs us in both. The duties we are here exhorted to employ ourselves in are the mortification of sin, living to God, sobriety, prayer, charity, hospitality, and the best improvement of our talents, which the apostle presseth upon Christians, from the consideration of the time they have lost in their sins, and the approaching end of all things, ver. 1—12. The directions for sufferings are, that we should not be surprised at them, but rejoice in them, only taking care not to suffer as evil doers. He intimates that their trials were near at hand; that their souls were in danger as well as their bodies, and the best way to preserve them was to commit them to God in well-doing.

1. FORASMUCH then [a] as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, [b] arm yourselves likewise with the same mind: for [c] he that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin; 2. [d] That he no longer should live the rest of his time in the flesh to the lusts of men, [e] but to the will of God. 3. [f] For the time past of our life may suffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, when we walked in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revellings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries: 4. [g] Wherein they think it strange that ye run not with them to the same excess of riot, speaking evil of you: 5. [h] Who shall give account to him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead. 6. [i] For, for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, [k] that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit.

Verses 1—6. The apostle here,

1. Draws an inference from what he had advanced. Forasmuch then as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind, with patience and holy resolution; for he that hath suffered in the flesh, crucifying the body of sin through union with a dying Saviour, and willingly taking up any cross which the Divine providence may lay upon him, hath ceased from sin, from his former corrupt principles and practice, and is professionally by his baptism mortified to every corrupt affection, as a dead man ceases from the actions of life: that he no longer should live the rest of his time in the flesh, to the will of men, but the little space which yet remains he is earnest to redeem, and fain would spend it according to the will of God. Note, (1.) Nothing so effectually mortifies sin as a believing view of the cross of Christ. (2.) The will of God, not our vile affections, must be our guide. If we live after the flesh, we shall die eternally, whilst the paths of grace and holiness alone can lead us to immortal life and glory.

2. The apostle argues on the reasonableness of living unto God, from the consideration of the abuse they had made of the time that was past. For the time past of our life may suffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, when (with shame and grief and anguish we remember it) we walked in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revellings, and riot, banquetings, and luxurious carousals, and abominable idolatries, joining with the Gentiles in these horrid deeds: wherein they think it strange that ye run not with them still to the same excess of riot as before, speaking evil of you and your religion, as if it made you morose, unsociable, and poor despicable objects; who shall give account to him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead, at the great day of his appearing and glory. Note, (1.) The remembrance of our former evil ways should often dwell upon our minds for our deep humiliation before God. (2.) They who have tasted the bitterness of sin, can be tempted by no consideration to return to those destructive ways which they have forsaken. (3.) The conduct of a Christian appears very strange to an ungodly world, and they wonder what there is in religion which, for the sake of it, can induce men to forego all that they call enjoyment. (4.) They who speak evil of our good conversation in Christ, must shortly give a solemn account of their hard speeches before an awful tribunal.

3. The former saints of God were thus censured of the world, and saved by grace. For this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are now dead in Christ, and departed in his faith and fear, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, and undergo reproach, persecution, and some of them even death itself, for those tenets which the carnal world derides and abhors, but might, notwithstanding all their sufferings in the body, live according to God in the spirit, under the mighty influence of his grace in a holy conformity to his will, and expecting, through the power of the Holy Ghost, to be raised up at the last day to live with God eternally.

7. [l] But the end of all things is at hand: [m] be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer. 8. [n] And above all things have fervent charity among yourselves:

Verses 7—11. We have here an awful position: But the end of all things is at hand. The Jewish state was soon to be destroyed, where dwelt the most inveterate persecutors of the Christian name; and to every individual is this truth most applicable, to whom death and eternity are approaching, and judgment is at the door; from which awful consideration the apostle enforces the following exhortations:

1. Be ye therefore sober, temperate in all things, not inordinately pursuing, nor immoderately using any thing in this world, knowing how short the time is. And,

2. Watch unto prayer; be on your guard against the numberless temptations which beset you, and especially be looking up by ceaseless prayer for strength to resist and overcome them. Note, Prayer is our great preservative; we shall never fail, whilst we continue waiting upon God.

3. And above all things have fervent charity among yourselves, cordially and tenderly affected towards each other: for charity shall cover the multitude of sins, engaging you kindly to overlook the offences of your brethren, to cast the veil of oblivion over their many infirmities, and to conceal them from the censorious world.

4. Use hospitality one to another, without grudging, freely and cheerfully receiving those who, for righteousness' sake, are driven from place to place, or are travelling to spread the glad tidings of salvation, and trusting on the Divine Providence for their maintenance.

5. As every man hath received the gift, whatever talents he is blessed with, whether of wealth, abilities, or grace, even so minister the same one to another, laying out yourselves for your mutual edification and comfort, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God, from whom you have received all that you possess, and to whom you are accountable for the due improvement of it. If any man speak, therefore, as called to the office of a preacher, let him speak as the oracles of God, with strict adherence to the sacred doctrines therein revealed, presuming to add nothing thereunto, nor diminish ought therefrom: if any man minister in the office of a deacon, or out of his worldly substance to the necessitous, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth, with all fidelity, cheerfulness and diligence, that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ, and his name exalted in the advancement of his church and his kingdom in the world, to whom be praise and dominion for ever and ever, to the incarnate Saviour, and to the Father through him. Amen! Note, (1.) Whatever we possess, we are but stewards, and must give an account to the great Master for the talents committed to our trust. (2.) God's glory should be the great end of our conversation, and in our lips and lives we should endeavour to show forth his praise.

12. Beloved, think it not strange concerning [u] the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you: 13. [x] But rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; [y] that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy. 14. [z] If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; [a] for the Spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you: [b] on their part he is evil spoken of, but on your part he is glorified. 15. [c] But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evil-doer, or as a busy-body in other men's matters. 16. [d] Yet if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf. 17. [e] For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God: [f] and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God? 18. [g] And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear? 19. Wherefore, let them that [h] suffer according to the will of God [i] commit the keeping of their souls to him in well-doing, as unto a faithful Creator.

Verses 12—19. The apostle here,

1. Encourages them to bear up boldly under their expected trials. Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as gold in the furnace, as if some strange thing happened unto you, and your sufferings were uncommon, and such as God's children might not have expected. But, however severe your trials may be, rejoice in them, forasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings, and herein conformed to your glorious head: that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy, and reign with him, as you have suffered for him. And, in the lesser trials of reviling and slander, if we are reproached for the name of Christ, branded with some opprobrious name, and made the objects of derision and contempt, happy are ye; let it be your delight to be thus vile, and gladly bear this honourable badge of infamy; for the Spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you, to comfort you under these reproaches, and to give you an earnest of that eternal glory to which these trials are the way: on their part he is evil spoken of, and his blessed operation reviled and blasphemed; but on your part he is glorified, and his name exalted by your faith and patience, and by the praises given him for the supports and comforts which you experience from him. Note, (1.) We must count no affliction strange; however grievous for the time; it is only permitted to be, because God sees we have much dross, and need that furnace to purge us from it. (2.) Our sufferings for Christ are our real honour, and should be our highest joy. (3.) In a day of recompense we shall never regret what we have endured for Christ and his cause. (4.) We need not wonder at any reproaches cast on ourselves, when even the blessed Spirit of God himself sustains the like blasphemies, and his operations are branded as delusion and enthusiasm.

2. He admonishes them not to give their enemies so much handle against them as they desired to have. But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evil-doer, justly chargeable with any criminal conduct whatever, or as a busy-body in other men's matters, prying into the concerns of his neighbours which do not belong to him, and neglecting his own. Yet if any man suffer as a Christian, and if, however innocent, through enmity to him on account of his religion, any of these atrocious crimes are charged upon him, let him not be ashamed of such malignant abuse, but let him glorify God on this behalf, that he is counted worthy to suffer shame for the name of Christ, and enabled to despise these calumnies.

3. He supports what he had advanced by the most weighty consideration. For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God, not only in the destruction of the Jewish temple, but in very severe visitations upon his spiritual church and people, who need the correction of his rod; and if it first begin at us, and we undergo the severe discipline of the cross, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God? How fearful will be the vengeance executed upon the finally impenitent and unbelieving! And if the righteous scarcely be saved, plucked as brands from the burning, and hardly escaping, like Lot, from the flames of Sodom, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear, who wilfully and obstinately reject all the warnings of God's providence, and the word of his grace, determined to abide in their iniquities, whatever the consequence may be? How terrible, sure, and inevitable must be their eternal perdition! Wherefore, let them that suffer according to the will of God, patiently and submissively, commit the keeping of their souls to him in well-doing, as unto a faithful Creator, content to refer themselves to him, resigned to his will, and ready to do or suffer according to his pleasure, satisfied in his faithfulness to all his promises, and sure to reap their fulfilment in a blessed eternity. Note, (1.) God corrects his own children that they may not be condemned with the world. (2.) If the Lord chastises his own people for the evil he sees in them, shall the rebellious sinner go unpunished? No, verily; there is vengeance hanging over his devoted head. (3.) The gate of heaven is strait: they who strive to enter, scarcely are able; how surely then must they be excluded, who never so much as set their faces heavenwards! (4.) Come what will, we know that our sufferings are sent of God, and that his faithfulness, power, and love, are engaged to bring us safely through them: and this is sufficient to make us easy, yea, happy under them.

CHAP. V.—ANNO DOMINI, 60.

In which the apostle gives particular directions, first to the elders, how to behave themselves towards their flock, in the four first verses; then to the younger, to be obedient and humble, and to cast their care upon God, in the three next verses. From thence to the end he exhorts all to sobriety, watchfulness against temptations, and steadfastness in the faith, praying earnestly for them; and so concludes his epistle with a solemn doxology, mutual salutations, and his apostolical benediction.

1. THE [a] elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder, and a [b] witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also [c] a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed: 2. [d] Feed the flock of God * which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly: [e] not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind: 3. [f] Neither as † being [g] lords over God's heritage, [h] but being ensamples to the flock. 4. And when the [i] chief Shepherd [k] shall appear, ye shall receive [l] a crown of glory that fadeth not away. 5. Likewise, [m] ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder. Yea, all of you [n] be subject one to another, and be clothed [o] with humility; for [p] God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. 6. [q] Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time: 7. [r] Casting all your care upon him; for he careth for you.

Verses 1—7. The apostle here,

1. Exhorts the presbyters to a diligent discharge of their sacred trust. The elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder, put in trust with the same gospel, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, bearing testimony to what I have seen, and ready to suffer with him and for him, and a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed, when the great Shepherd and Bishop of souls shall appear to reward his faithful ministers. In the view and expectation of which, feed the flock of God which is among you with fidelity, diligence, and zeal, preaching the sound doctrine, and maintaining the wholesome discipline of the gospel, considering at what a price this ransomed flock was purchased: taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly, watching over them with wisdom, and holy solicitude to promote their spiritual and eternal good; not by constraint, as compelled to do it against your inclinations, but willingly, delighting in your blessed office and employment, not for filthy lucre, as the motive to undertake the charge, but of a ready mind, free from every mercenary view, and influenced purely by zeal for the Redeemer and love towards immortal souls; neither as being lords over God's heritage, and ruling with arrogance and haughtiness, as if you had dominion over men's consciences, but being ensamples to the flock, in all humility, meekness, and holy conversation. And then know for your encouragement, that when the chief Shepherd shall appear, who hath appointed you to serve under him, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away, the blessed reward of your fidelity. Note, (1.) The office of a presbyter is a high and honourable employment, and calls for suitable zeal and faithfulness to discharge it aright. (2.) None should ever enter the ministry by constraint, at the solicitation of friends, or as bred to it for a maintenance, but as prompted by a desire to glorify God, and to be instrumental in the salvation of lost souls. (3.) They who would profit others by their preaching, must second it by their examples; else how can we think that others will believe us, if it appear by our ill conduct that we do not believe ourselves! (4.) The reward of faithful ministers shall be eminently glorious: they shall shine as stars in the firmament for ever and ever.

2. He addresses himself to the younger, and all private members of the church. Likewise, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder; be guided by their advice, and attentive to their admonitions: yea, all of you be subject one to another, paying that deference and respect that is due to every one according to his station, age, rank, or office; and be clothed with humility, as a shining garb, which gives beauty to the whole conversation, and adds a lustre to every other grace; for he resisteth the proud, that is the character of all others which God abhors, and he giveth grace to the humble, who are peculiarly his delight, and enriched by him abundantly, and prepared for his presence in glory. Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, enduring meekly whatever afflictions he is pleased to send upon you, and submissive to those whom he hath set over you; that he may exalt you in due time, lifting you above all your tribulations, and bringing you to a throne at his right hand: casting all your care upon him, whatever difficulties and trials you may be involved in, for he careth for you, will preserve your bodies and souls, give you a happy issue out of all your afflictions, and cause them to work together for your eternal felicity. Note, (1.) It is the wisdom of young men to pay deference and obedience to the advice and admonitions of their more aged and experienced friends. (2.) God is the enemy of the proud, as of Satan their chief: and in the unequal contest with Omnipotence, they must needs be undone. (3.) Humility is our greatest ornament, and in God's sight of great price, and those who possess it he delighteth to honour. (4.) God's time must be expected; he will send us relief in due season, if we faint not. (5.) No one ever cast his care upon God, and was confounded.

8. [r] Be sober, be vigilant; because [s] your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about seeking whom he may devour: 9. [t] Whom resist stedfast in the faith, knowing that [u] the same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren that are in the world. 10. But the [x] God of all grace, [y] who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, [z] after that ye have suffered a while, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you. 11. [a] To him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

Verses 8—11. The apostle, in the view of the subtle enemy which they had to contend against,

1. Admonishes them to be on their guard. Be sober, be vigilant; weaned from all inordinate attachment to present things, and watchful in the use of every divine ordinance against the wiles of the great deceiver; because your adversary the devil, ever waiting for your halting, as a roaring lion, fierce and cruel, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour; restless and indefatigable in his attempts to murder immortal souls, and maliciously endeavouring to terrify those whom he is not permitted to destroy. Note, We have a deadly foe to conflict with, powerful, wily, watchful, experienced in deceit; we need be ever on our guard against his snares.

2. The only way in which we can overcome is here set before us. Whom resist steadfast in the faith, lifting up this impenetrable shield against all the fiery darts of the wicked one, and encouraged by the examples and victories of our suffering fellow-christians, knowing that the same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren that are in the world; they war against the same enemy, and are supported under all their trials, and through faith made more than conquerors. Note, (1.) The examples of others should be our encouragement. (2.) They who in faith resist the devil, will find the weakness of all his efforts, and that before this terrible shield he will be compelled to fly.

3. He offers up his fervent prayers on their behalf. But the God of all grace, the fountain and giver of it to all his people, never deserting them in any of their trials, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Jesus Christ, to partake of unutterable blessedness in his presence for ever, through the redemption obtained by his dear Son, after that ye have suffered a while here below, make you perfect, in holiness and happiness, and in your way to this state of complete felicity, stablish you in the truth, strengthen your hearts with grace, and settle you on that foundation from which you never can be moved. To him be glory and dominion for ever and ever; be his name adored for all his past mercies and protection, and may we be enabled still to trust upon his care and love, Amen!

Verses 12—14. He concludes,

1. With giving an account of his design in this epistle, and the person who was the bearer of it. By Sylvanus, a faithful brother unto you, (as I suppose) (and conclude from the most substantial grounds) I have written briefly this short epistle, exhorting, and testifying that this is the true grace of God wherein ye stand, in the doctrine and practice of which you have hitherto persevered, and I trust will continue even unto the end. Note, They who have begun well must stand fast in the same grace which they have experienced.

2. He presents the salutations of the church at Babylon, from whence he seems to have written this epistle. The church that is at Babylon, elected together with you, through Jesus Christ unto life and glory, saluteth you, in all Christian wishes of peace and prosperity, and so doth Marcus my son; who was either really such, or spiritually; some suppose he means the evangelist Mark, who was sister's son to Barnabas.

3. He exhorts them to fervent charity among themselves. Greet ye one another with a kiss of charity, in token of your mutual, unfeigned affection.

4. He pronounces his parting benediction upon them. Peace be with you all that are in Christ Jesus, and every blessing, spiritual, temporal, or eternal, which is the happy portion of those that are united to him their living head. May that portion, reader, be thine and mine. Amen!

A PRACTICAL COMMENT

UPON THE

SECOND EPISTLE GENERAL

PETER.

Introduction.

THE penman of this epistle appears plainly to be the same who wrote the foregoing. He was one of the three apostles that were present at Christ's transfiguration, ver. 18. and says expressly, that he had written a former epistle to them, chap. iii. 1. and the design of this second epistle is the same with that of the former, as is evident from the first verse of the third chapter; whence observe, that in the things of God, we have need of precept upon precept, and line upon line, and all little enough to keep them in remembrance; and these are the things which should be most faithfully recorded, and frequently remembered by us.

CHAP. I.—ANNO DOMINI, 66.

In this chapter we have, 1. An introduction, ver. 1—4. 2. An exhortation to advance and improve in all Christian graces, ver. 5, 6, 7. To enforce this exhortation, he adds, (1.) A representation of the very great advantage which will thereby accrue to them, ver. 8—11. (2.) A promise of the best assistance the apostle was able to give, to facilitate and forward this good work, ver. 12—15. (3.) A declaration of the certain truth and divine original of the gospel of Christ, in the grace whereof they were exhorted to increase and persevere.

1. SIMON [a] PETER, [b] a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ, to them that have obtained [c] like precious faith with us [d] through the righteousness of [e] God and our Saviour Jesus Christ: 2. [f] Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord, 3. According as his divine power hath given unto us [g] all things that pertain unto life and godliness, [h] through the knowledge of him that hath [i] called us * to glory and virtue: 4. Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that [l] by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.

Verses 1—4. The apostle, being about to finish his glorious course, addresses his last epistle to his Hebrew brethren. We have,

1. The writer: Simon Peter, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ. In the dignity to which he was advanced, he did not forget that his office was not so much to rule as to serve the meanest member of the Redeemer's church.

2. The persons to whom the epistle is addressed. To them that have obtained like precious faith with us, and are interested in the same glorious salvation, through the righteousness of God, or, of our God and Saviour Jesus Christ, which is the meritorious cause by which we have obtained a sure title to eternal blessedness. Note, (1.) Divine faith may well be called precious, seeing the effects of it are so unspeakably glorious. (2.) Whatever faith we possess, it is because of our lot among the chosen, who are the objects of Christ's sovereign love, and undeserved favour. (3.) In the divine righteousness of God our Saviour we stand complete before God, and may by right claim all the blessings of perfect obedience.

3. His apostolical benediction. Grace and peace, with all the blessings of the everlasting gospel, be multiplied unto you, in more abundant manifestations and deeper inward experience of them, through the knowledge of God, as your covenant and reconciled God, and of Jesus our Lord, in all the blessed offices and relations he bears towards us his redeemed people.

4. The ground on which he built his confidence, that his prayers for them should be heard and answered. According as his divine power hath given unto us freely all things that pertain unto life and godliness, bestowing every blessing and means of grace which can conduce to the furtherance of the divine life in our souls till it is perfected above, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue; our acquaintance with Jesus, and acknowledgment of him as the only Saviour of souls being effectual to engage us in the pursuit of glory as our end, and with fortitude unshaken to walk in all his holy ways. Whereby (δι' ὧν) or by whom, even through the graces of these divine Persons, are given us exceeding great and precious promises, above all our conceptions, as well as beyond all our deserts; that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, or a divine nature, by the gospel word, and the great and precious promises therein revealed, wherein beholding, as in a glass, the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ, you are transformed into the same image, not partaking of the divine essence, but formed anew after the divine likeness in righteousness and true holiness; having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust, flying from out of the world which lieth in wickedness, as from a city infected with the plague, and renouncing all the corrupt principles and practices that, through the natural concupiscence which reigns in every fallen heart, in time past defiled your whole body, soul, and spirit. Note, (1.) All that is good in us comes alone from the divine power and grace. (2.) The gospel calls us to glory and virtue; and at the same time communicates the effectual ability for the performance of all that it commands. (3.) The knowledge of God, as he is revealed to us in the gospel of his dear Son, is the grand means of engaging our hearts towards him. (4.) Exceeding great indeed and precious are those promises, that reach to the deepest state of human guilt and misery, and extend to an eternity of glory in the highest. (5.) They who, by the transforming vision of God in the gospel, are truly made partakers of a divine nature, will show it by their deadness to the world, and the subdual of every sensual appetite.

Wherefore the rather, [s] brethren, give [t] diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, [u] ye shall never fall: 11. [x] For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Verses 5—11. Because they had already received so much from God, they were bound to make their profiting appear. We have,

1. A gold chain of graces, which we are called to put on. And besides this, or for this cause, seeing you are partakers of a divine nature, giving all diligence to increase with the increase of God, add to your faith virtue, courage and boldness in the profession of the gospel; and to virtue knowledge, prudently considering the company, place, and time, when our courage in vindicating the cause of Christ may be most successfully exerted; and to knowledge temperance, keeping our passions and appetites under strict government, and using all the creatures with a holy moderation; and to temperance patience under every provocation; bearing with the injuries, reproaches, and perverseness of others, and meekly submissive under affliction; and to patience godliness, exercising yourselves in every act of devotion and means of grace, from a principle of love to God, and desire of nearer communion with him; and to godliness brotherly kindness, feeling the tenderest sympathy and compassion towards your fellow-christians, and ready to every good word and work that may be helpful to them; and to brotherly kindness charity, having your heart enlarged to all mankind, with universal benevolence towards every human creature, and a desire to promote their temporal, spiritual, and eternal welfare, not excluding even your greatest and most inveterate enemies.

2. These graces will adorn our profession, as the want of them must necessarily prove us destitute of true Christianity. For if these things be in you, and abound, in lively exercise, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ: but as trees of righteousness the planting of the Lord, full of life, sap, and fruitfulness, which redound to his glory. Whilst he that lacketh these things is blind, whatever pretences to wisdom he may make; and cannot see afar off, at best hath but a glimmering and notional apprehension of divine truth, being a stranger to that realizing faith which brings near the distant objects of an eternal world: and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins, unfaithful to the profession which he made at his baptism, and negligent in his application to that blood which alone can cleanse him from all his iniquities.

3. He exhorts all believers to diligence in their Christian course. Wherefore the rather, brethren, considering how many have a name to live who are really dead in trespasses, give diligence to make your calling and election sure, in the lively use of every means of grace, which may bring the fullest assurance of it to your own souls, and in the practice of all holy conversation, which may demonstrate to others that ye are indeed chosen vessels, and called unto glory, for, if ye do these things, and live in the exercise of the graces above-mentioned, ye shall never fall, so as finally to apostatize from Christ, and perish with the world: for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, when at the last, triumphant over death and the grave, you shall be admitted into all the glories of the eternal world, and so shall be for ever with the Lord. Note, (1.) Though our election be sure in God's purpose, and in the event to all his people, yet He, who hath connected the means with the end, requires our diligence and care to work out our own salvation with fear and trembling. (2.) They shall shortly enter an eternal world of glory, who now walk under the influences of a Saviour's grace.

12. Wherefore [y] I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though [z] ye know them, and be established in the present truth. 13. Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in [a] this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance; 14. decease to have these things always in remembrance.

Verses 12—15. The apostle appears careful to discharge his own solemn trust towards them.

Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, as matters of the last importance, though ye know them, in a good measure: and be established in the present truth, fully satisfied in general of the necessity of holiness, in order to an entrance into the kingdom of heaven. Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle of clay, to stir you up, by putting you in remembrance, that your hearts may be suitably affected, and your practice correspondent with your Christian principles. And hereunto I give the greater diligence, knowing that I must shortly put off this my tabernacle of the body, and be soon silent in the dust, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath showed me. Moreover, I will endeavour, both by my labours among you and these epistles, which, when I am dead, will yet speak, that ye may be able, after my decease, to have these things always in remembrance. Note, (1.) Even the truths we know, we need to be often reminded of, and urged to show their influence on our conduct. (2.) A minister's work is never done till he closes his eyes: his deathbed must be his farewell sermon. (3.) We live in houses of clay, whose foundation is in the dust; but, blessed be God, we need not regret the dissolution of this wretched tabernacle, when we are to exchange it for a mansion of glory.

16. [d] For we have not followed cunningly-devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were [e] eyewitnesses of his majesty. 17. For he received from [f] God the Father [g] honour and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. 18. And this voice which came from heaven [h] we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount. 19. [i] We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, [k] as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts: 20. Knowing this first, that [l] no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation. 21. ‡ Or at any time.

Verses 16—21. We have here a reason given for the importunity and seriousness with which he pressed the foregoing exhortations. For we have not followed cunningly-devised fables like the Gentile legends or Jewish traditions, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, at the last great day of his appearing and glory, to judge the assembled world of men and angels. But,

1. We were eye-witnesses of his majesty, on the mount of transfiguration, and attest that of which we had the fullest demonstration: not only seeing his glorified body shining in all the brightness of the meridian sun, but hearing the voice of God. For he there received from God the Father honour and glory, who bore the fullest testimony to the transcendent dignity of his divine character as his Son Messiah, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, the bright cloud which overshadowed him, the symbol of the divine presence, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased, in his person, offices, and all his undertakings. And this voice, which came from heaven, we heard distinctly and clearly, when we were with him on the holy mount. So that they could not be mistaken themselves in the things which they testified.

2. We have also a more sure word of prophecy, wherein a more direct attestation is borne to the power and coming of Jesus to judgment, than might be inferred from what we saw and heard. Or, we have a most sure word of prophecy, wherein this second appearing of the Lord to judgment, is most expressly and repeatedly affirmed; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, (and a dark world indeed would this be without the word of God,) until the day, the great, the expected day of our final redemption, dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts, to shine henceforward with unclouded lustre on his chosen, when the Lord shall be our everlasting light, and our God our glory. Knowing this first, that, till the day of Christ appears, we may surely depend upon his prophetic word as our guide: for no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation, (ἐπιλύσεως,) is not of human invention or composition, but of celestial origin: for the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God, whom he had sanctified to be instruments in his hands to deliver his messages, spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, directing and dictating both the matter and expression. Note, (1.) The scriptures alone are our guide to glory. All our wisdom is ignorance, and our light darkness, without a divine revelation. (2.) The more diligently we take heed to the word of God, read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest it, the more surely shall we walk in holiness and happiness here, and be brought to the perfection of both in heaven hereafter. (4.) The scriptures carry their own divine authority along with them, and, through the energy of that Spirit who indited them, impress this full conviction on the conscience. (4.) Though the Bible was written by men, we must say, as of the tables which Moses hewed, that the writing was of God. They were but organs and instruments, and did not themselves often comprehend the full meaning of what they delivered. With what sacred reverence and awe then should we open that holy book, where God himself is heard still speaking!

CHAP. II.—ANNO DOMINI, 66.

The apostle here gives them fair warning of false teachers, by whom they might be in danger of being seduced. To prevent this, 1. He describes these seducers as impious in themselves, and very pernicious to others, ver. 1, 2, 3. 2. He assures them of the punishment that shall be inflicted on them, ver. 3, 4, 5, 6. 3. He tells us how contrary the method is which God takes with those who fear him, ver. 7, 8, 9. 4. He fills up the rest of the chapter with a farther description of those seducers of whom he would have them beware.

1. Verses 1—9. False teachers in the church have ever been more dangerous and destructive than all the persecutions of the enemies without. Against these the apostle here warns the people.

1. He describes them. But there were false prophets also among the people of Israel of old, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who, under pretences to divine inspiration, privily shall bring in damnable heresies, craftily perverting the word of God, and adulterating the doctrines of the gospel; even denying the Lord that bought them, redeemed them from Egypt with his mighty hand, and in a long succession of miracles repeatedly delivered them out of the hands of their enemies, Deut. xxxii. 6. yet they both doctrinally and practically renounced and disowned him: and, as the dreadful consequence of their disobedience, bring upon themselves swift destruction, which shall quickly come upon them to the uttermost. And many shall follow their pernicious ways, seduced by their cunning and ill examples; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of, and blasphemed by the enemies of the Christian name: and through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you; influenced merely by the detestable principles of avarice, and, amidst all their specious professions, making religion their trade, and designing wholly their secular advantage. Note, (1.) They who enter the ministry for gain must needs be deceivers, and perish in their wickedness. (2.) Deluding teachers are sure to find followers; error being much more acceptable to the fallen heart than holy truth.

2. He foretells their destruction. Whose judgment, now of long time suspended, yet lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not, but soon shall it terribly overtake them in the midst of their security and sensuality. Note, Vengeance against sinners is often slow, but always sure. Three awful instances here are produced of God's judgments.

(1.) The fallen angels. For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, though creatures of so much higher rank than men; and, on their first offence, delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment at the great day; much less will he spare these obstinate offenders.

(2.) The antediluvian world. And God spared not the old world, when abandoned to wickedness; but saved Noe the eighth person, with whom only seven more escaped in the ark, a preacher of righteousness, both of the imputed righteousness, and that moral righteousness to which he exhorted the men of his generation, calling them to repent of their iniquities: and, when they continued obstinate against his warnings, God issued forth the dread decree, opening the windows of heaven, bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly, and swallowing them up in the mighty waters. If, therefore he executed such vengeance upon them, let not other incorrigible sinners think at present to escape.

(3.) The destruction of Sodom. And turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrha into ashes, he condemned them with an overthrow, raining fire and brimstone upon them: making them an ensample unto those that after should live ungodly, that, taking warning by their fearful punishment, they might avoid or repent of their crimes before it be too late; otherwise the same wrath shall still seize upon the ungodly and the sinner.

3. For the encouragement of the faithful, he mentions the wonderful escape of Lot from the flames. When God destroyed the cities where he dwelt, he delivered just Lot, vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked, grieved for the dishonour brought thereby upon God, and for the ruin which must infallibly descend upon their devoted heads: for that righteous man dwelling among them, in seeing and hearing, vexed his righteous soul from day to day with their unlawful deeds, enduring the most painful reflections in the view of their wickedness, and the vengeance which hung over them. The Lord knoweth, as is evident by this instance, how to deliver the godly out of temptations: and he will do it in his own good time; and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished, who, though they should escape any signal stroke of divine vengeance in this life, are reserved unto the last dreadful day, when their iniquities shall receive their just reward.

Verses 10—22. The apostle here,

1. At large describes the seducing teachers, whose practices were copied after the vilest of those ungodly workers whom he had mentioned, and who with them behoved to perish. But chiefly them will God reserve unto judgment, that walk after the flesh, in the lust of uncleanness, like the men of Sodom; and despise government, seditious and refractory, unwilling to submit to any restraint: presumptuous are they, and self-willed; they are not afraid to speak evil of dignities, reviling both the ministers and apostles of Christ, and the civil magistrates set over them for the restraint of evil-doers. Whereas angels, which are greater in power and might than every earthly potentate, yet bring not a railing accusation against them before the Lord, reviling their persons or government. But these despisers of God's ordinances, as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed by men, for whose use they were created, speak evil of the things that they understand not, reviling persons and things, civil and religious, of whose excellence they have not the least knowledge: and shall utterly perish in their own corruptions, abandoned to their wicked hearts, and left to their ruin: and shall receive the reward of unrighteousness, as they that count it pleasure to riot in the day-time, daring and impudent in sin, not even waiting for the night to cover their shame. Spots they are, and blemishes, a reproach to the name of Christian which they presume to bear; sporting themselves with their own deceivings, whilst they feast with you, and live in the indulgence of their sins, whilst they outwardly appear to maintain communion with you; having eyes full of adultery, whose wanton looks bespeak the impurity of their hearts; and that cannot cease from sin, enslaved by their sensual appetites, and insatiate in the indulgence of them; beguiling unstable souls, as Satan beguiled Eve through his subtilty, and tempting them to comply with their corrupt and lewd desires. A heart they have exercised with covetous practices, all their contrivances and pursuits being to amass wealth; cursed children, under the wrath of a holy God; who have forsaken the right way of salvation by Jesus Christ, and are gone astray from the paths of truth and holiness, following the way of Balaam the son of Bosor, who loved the wages of unrighteousness, and, notwithstanding his specious professions to Balak's messengers, really coveted the king of Moab's offers; but was rebuked for his iniquity, in a very signal manner, the dumb ass, on which he rode, speaking with man's voice, by miraculous powers, forbade the madness of the prophet in presuming to go, after the warnings to the contrary which he had received, or to attempt the cursing of that people whom the Lord had blessed. These are wells without water, pretending to piety, but disappointing those who, like the thirsty traveller, come to them for the water of life: clouds that are carried with a tempest, that promise rain, but prove noxious vapours; to whom the mist of darkness is reserved for ever, going from the darkness of sin and error to the horrible and eternal darkness of hell. For when they speak great swelling words of vanity, pretending to high flights of science, and boasting their vast attainments, they allure through the lusts of the flesh, through much wantonness, by temptations suited to the corrupt inclinations of their hearers, those that were clean escaped from them who live in error, and had made a credible profession for a season, but now relapse into all their former abominations. While they promise them liberty, a carnal liberty, to live as they list without restraint, they themselves are the servants of corruption, the veriest slaves in nature to base and vile affections: for of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought into bondage; and no bondage is so dreadful as that of sin and Satan. Note, (1.) The sins of lewdness are the dreadful rock on which unstable souls make shipwreck of the faith. (2.) They who have hearts set on their covetousness are hardly turned away from their vile pursuits, though conscience, like the faithful monitor of Balaam, often startles and accuses them. (3.) None are so far escaped from the world, but they have need to watch and pray that they fall not into temptation. (4.) However speciously the snare may be laid, and whatever liberty we may promise ourselves in sin, to our cost we shall find the dire delusion, and prove how fearful is the bondage of corruption.

2. He warns them, by all the dreadful consequences of apostasy, to beware of these seducers. For if, after they have escaped the pollutions of the world, through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and from the preaching of the gospel have been laid under such restraints as for a while to appear creditable in their profession, they are again entangled therein, and overcome, so as to become thorough slaves to their lusts and appetites, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning, and their state more guilty than when they lay before in utter darkness, ignorance, and error. For it had been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, or to have heard of Christ and his salvation, than, after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them. But it hath happened unto them according to the true proverb, The dog is turned to his own vomit again; and the sow that was washed, to her wallowing in the mire. Note, (1.) Under convictions of sin, many for a while nauseate their former lewdness, who soon return to their forsaken iniquities with greediness, when the impressions which have been made die away. (2.) Whatever outward reformation may be made, if the heart is not right with God, all is still naught within; the swinish nature is not changed by the washing, and apostasy will inevitably be the issue. (3.) None perish with such aggravated guilt as those who have made the fairest professions, and seemed to begin well, but fail in their course, and relapse into iniquity. Woeful will be the end of apostates.

CHAP. III.—ANNO DOMINI, 66.

The apostle, drawing towards the conclusion of his second epistle, begins this last chapter of it with repeating an account of his design and scope in writing a second time to them, ver. 1, 2. 2. He proceeds to mention one thing that induced him to write this second epistle, namely, the coming of scoffers, whom he describes, ver. 3—7. 3. He instructs and establishes them in the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ to judgment, ver. 8, 9, 10. 4. He sets forth the use and improvement which Christians ought to make of Christ's second coming, and that dissolution and renovation of things which will accompany that solemn coming of our Lord, ver. 11—18.

1. THIS [a] second epistle, beloved, I now write unto you; in both which I stir up your [b] pure minds by way of remembrance; 2. That ye [c] may be mindful of the words which were spoken before by the holy prophets, and of the commandment of us the apostles of the Lord and Saviour: 3. [d] Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, 4. And saying, [e] Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation. 5. For [f] this they willingly are ignorant of, that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth * standing out of the water and in the water: 6. [g] Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished: 7. [h] But the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men.

Verses 1—7. The apostle sets forth his design of writing both these epistles. This second epistle, beloved, I now write unto you; in both which I stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance, that you may be guarded against the arts of deceivers, and that ye may be mindful of the words which were spoken before by the holy prophets, and of the commandment of us the apostles of the Lord and Saviour, who in perfect conformity with the inspired penmen of the old scriptures, as in other things, so particularly with regard to the coming of the Lord to judgment, have forewarned and admonished you. Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers at revelation, and all its glorious and distinguishing doctrines; walking after their own lusts, given up to sensuality and brutish appetites; and with daring infidelity, and defiance of the divine declarations, saying, Where is the promise of his coming, so much talked of? when is this Jesus of Nazareth to come and take vengeance on his enemies and to destroy the world? for since the fathers fell asleep (say they) during so many hundred years, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation. Thus they vainly argue; and, because judgment is not speedily executed upon the workers of iniquity, they would conclude that there is nothing to be feared. For, though the scripture assures them that God hath already eminently manifested his righteous wrath by the general destruction of an ungodly world, this they willingly, and wilfully, are ignorant of, that the heavens were of old created by the almighty word, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water, rising from the abyss of waters which covered it at the first, moistened still by this element and compacted together, and surrounded with waters above, and full of waters in its bowels: whereby the world that then was, being overflowed at the general deluge, perished, and the scoffers of that day met their righteous doom. But the heavens and the earth which are now, by the same almighty word are kept in store as treasures reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men. And however the scoffers of this day may despise God's warnings, yet the evident marks which still remain of what he hath done by the deluge, are speaking evidences of his power to fulfil a more terrible denunciation, when his fire shall descend, and a general conflagration ensue. A day, which will spread terror and dismay through an ungodly world, and, too late, convince those infidel mockers, that it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.

8. But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that [i] one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day. 9. [k] The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; [l] but is long-suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. 10. [m] But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which [n] the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burnt up. 11. Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, [o] what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness, 12. Verses 8—12. The apostle having warned them against the scoffers, encourages the saints of God to expect their Lord's second coming.

1. He will surely come. But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day. Though we measure time by succession, to the eternal God, the past, the present, and the future appear in one comprehensive view, and as nothing compared with his eternity. The Lord is not slack concerning his promise (as some men count slackness) too impatient for his appearing, but is long-suffering to us-ward, not willing that any of his redeemed people should perish, but that all should come to repentance, called in due time to the acknowledgment of the truth, and saved by grace; and when the number of his elect shall be accomplished, then he shall hasten, his kingdom will come at the appointed period and not tarry a moment longer. Note, (1.) The great design God hath in view is the salvation of his own people. (2.) The way in which any can meet the Lord with comfort is, by being converted and turned to him now by faith; the impenitent and unbelieving must assuredly perish.

2. He will come suddenly. But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, with such a terrible surprise to an ungodly world; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, when nature in convulsions shall utter her expiring groans, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, dissolved amidst the universal conflagration, the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burnt up, and not a wreck remain of all its glorious structures.

3. What influence ought such an expectation to have upon us? Seeing then all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness? How dead to the world, how loose to its enjoyments, how patient under the present momentary afflictions, how wholly engrossed with one great concern, to secure a part in that eternal world whither we are going, looking for, and hasting unto the coming of the day of the Lord, keeping it abidingly in view, and living in a constant preparation for that solemn hour, when the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat? Note, It is the character of a disciple of Jesus, that he is ever looking for his Lord's return as the glorious hope which animates him for every duty, and supports him under all his trials.

Verses 13—18. We have here,

1. The Christian's expectations when this heaven and earth shall be dissolved. Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness, even that blessed abode which Everlasting Love hath prepared for the redeemed from the earth, where nothing shall ever enter which defileth, and where our bliss and glory will be eternal.

2. He exhorts them, in the prospect of such an inheritance,

(1.) To be faithful in their holy profession. Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent in the use of every appointed means of grace, and in all holy watchfulness, that ye may be found of him in peace, possessing a sure interest in his love, without spot of sin, and blameless in his presence at that great day. Note, They are truly safe and happy for ever, whose consciences are now purged through the Saviour's blood, and by the power of his grace.

(2.) Patiently to persevere, though the time should yet be distant. And account that the long-suffering of our Lord is salvation, and that the reason of his delay is for the benefit of his people's souls, that his elect may all be finally gathered in; even as our beloved brother Paul also, according to the wisdom given unto him, hath written unto you; as also in all his epistles, speaking in them of these things, of God's long-suffering, and the coming of the Lord to judgment; in which doctrines are some things hard to be understood, being of a sublime and spiritual nature, which they that are unlearned and unstable, who are not divinely taught of God, and whose principles are fluctuating and unsettled, wrest and distort from their true meaning, as they do also the other scriptures, unto their own destruction. Note, The more dangerous it is to be ignorant in the scriptures, the more diligently should we search them, and pray God to enlighten our minds that we may be made wise unto salvation.

(3.) To beware of all deceivers. Ye therefore, beloved, seeing ye know these things before, that Christ will surely come and take vengeance of the ungodly, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, by their flatteries and seductions, fall from your own steadfastness, and depart from the purity of that gospel, which you have hitherto so nobly maintained. Note, (1.) When deluding teachers are at work, we need be deeply on our guard. (2.) They who fall into erroneous principles grow soon unsettled in their practice, and show the baleful influence of this poison.

(4.) To advance in the divine life. But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, gaining a deeper and more experimental acquaintance with his love, a more unshaken dependence upon him, and an increase of every divine and spiritual disposition in consequence thereof.

3. He concludes with an ascription of praise to the Divine Redeemer. To him be glory both now and for ever. May every creature in heaven and earth unite in ceaseless worship, praise, and adoration to the great Immanuel! Amen!

A PRACTICAL COMMENT

UPON THE

OF

Introduction.

THIS epistle is universally ascribed to the apostle John, and it indeed contains in itself the fullest evidence that it flowed from the same pen which wrote the Gospel and Revelation. Though the precise time when he wrote is not certain, it seems, from chap. ii. 18. and iv. 1. to have been a little before the destruction of Jerusalem. The epistle is styled General, as not being addressed to any particular church, but to the body of Christian believers throughout the world, in order to confirm their faith in the glory and divinity of the Lord Jesus; to maintain the sacred doctrines of his person and offices against heretical seducers; to quicken them to the practice of righteousness and true holiness; and to engage them to the exercise of fervent charity towards each other; that, thus united, they might be preserved from the world which lieth in wickedness, and come to the eternal enjoyment of their ever blessed God and Saviour.

Verses 1—4. The blessed penman of this epistle immediately enters into his subject. Full of Christ, he breaks forth;

That which was from the beginning, that glorious and divine person, who from eternity as the Son, subsisted with the Father in the same undivided essence, which, in the fulness of time, became incarnate, we have heard, preaching his everlasting gospel, which we have seen with our eyes, living and dying, which we have looked upon, attentively regarding him both before and after his resurrection from the dead, and our hands have handled, so that we have the strongest and most indubitable evidence of his true humanity, and of the reality of his resurrection in the same body which before his death he had assumed into personal union with himself, who emphatically bears the name of the Word of life, being the fountain of natural life to every creature, and the giver of spiritual and eternal life to his redeemed people; (for the life, the Lord of life and glory, was manifested in the flesh, and we have seen it, and bear witness, and show unto you that eternal life, who from everlasting existed in the unity of the Godhead, which was with the Father, one with him in co-essential glory, and was, in the fulness of time, according to the prophetic word, manifested to us in the human nature,) that adored personage, which we have seen and heard, and concerning whom we are most incontestably assured that our record is true, HIM we declare unto you, as God and Man in one Christ, as the only and all-sufficient Saviour, through whom all blessings in time and eternity are obtained for his people; and we publish his offices, glory, and gospel, that ye also may have fellowship with us in all the inestimable privileges which he bestows on his chosen, on us, and all who believe on his name: and truly this communion is of the most transcendently glorious nature, for our fellowship is with the Father himself, and with his Son Jesus Christ, in and through whom we are admitted into the nearest, most honourable, and eternal union and friendship with the God of glory. And these things write we unto you, that your joy may be full, abounding with consolation in the experience of the present invaluable privileges of pardon, adoption, and grace, and advancing to the perfection of joy in heaven, and to the pleasures which are at God's right hand for evermore. Note, (1.) It is the dignity of every faithful soul that he is admitted into communion with God, and is one with Jesus, as a member of his body mystical. (2.) They who know the Saviour experimentally, as united to him in faith and love, have within them a fund of never-ending consolation, a well of living waters springing up into everlasting life.

But if we [m] walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and [n] the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.

Verses 5—7. Having mentioned the Author of the everlasting gospel, the apostle passes on to the message which they had received from him to deliver unto men.

1. Concerning God. This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is light; a Spirit absolutely pure, infinite in all perfections: without the least shadow or possibility of imperfection; and in him is no darkness at all. Note, Our poor and finite ideas are unable adequately to comprehend the divine excellencies: nay, angels before him veil their faces, for he dwelleth in that light which no creature can approach unto, so as fully to discern his glory. What we know of him is rather by removing every defect from him, and saying what he is not, rather than what he is.

2. Concerning those who professed to believe in him. [1.] If we say that we have fellowship with him, through the gospel of his dear Son, and yet notwithstanding walk in darkness, the allowed servants of sin, which is so opposite to his essential purity, we lie, and do not the truth; our falsehood is evident to his all-searching eye, and our practice contradicts our professions, and proves our hypocrisy. But, [2.] if we walk in the light of truth and holiness, under the guidance of his Spirit, and according to our Christian profession, as he is in the light, resembling him in his communicable perfections; then we have fellowship one with another; we dwell in God, and God in us, enjoying the most distinguishing communion with him in spirit; and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin; completely justified in God's sight, free from all condemnation, and assured also that the being of sin in us shall be shortly for ever rooted out. Blessed and happy are they whom this blood cleanses, and who are admitted into this holy fellowship.

8. [o] If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. 9. [p] If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. 10. [q] If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us.

Verses 8—10. The apostle, to prevent all misconception, as if perfection were to be attained here below, plainly declares, that sin still cleaves to those who are nearest and dearest to God. For,

1. If we say that we have no sin, not that we never had, but that we have it not now; if we, even the highest apostles, dare make such an arrogant boast, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us; we are under a most dangerous error and delusion. And he repeats the admonition, ver. 10. to guard more strongly against all the pride of pretended perfectionists; If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, by directly contradicting his truth; because being by nature corrupted creatures, we remain, and must remain whilst in the body, imperfect; and, if we deny it, his word is not in us, which every where supposes and declares us to be such; for if we were not, the exercise of faith in the atoning blood, and of daily repentance, would be at an end.

2. If we confess our sins, and humbly, through faith in Jesus Christ, apply for the promised mercy of God, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins: faithful to the covenant of grace, and to his promise made therein to the Redeemer on the behalf of his people; just, because having received the ransom of atoning blood, it is become an act of justice to pardon those who plead it, and to cleanse them from all unrighteousness. Note, Our acceptance with God stands not on the footing of mercy only, but is assured to us by that very perfection of holiness which seemed most strongly to militate against the sinner's hope.

1. [a] MY little children, these things write I unto you, [b] that ye sin not. And if any man sin, [c] we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous. 2. And [d] he is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world. 3. And [e] hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments. 4. [f] He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not him. 5. [g] But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected: hereby know we that we are in him. 6. [h] He that saith he abideth in him ought himself also so to walk, even as he walked.

Verses 1—6. We have here,

1. The design which the apostle chiefly aimed at in what he had written. My little children, whom I regard with the tenderest sensations of paternal love, these things write I unto you that ye sin not; watchful against every surprise and temptation, and never allowing yourselves in the practice of it. And if any man, through the infirmity of his nature, be drawn aside from the way of God's commandments, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, who shall still plead our cause, when we with shame and sorrow return to him, whose everlasting righteousness shall stand us in stead before the throne of God. And he is the abiding propitiation for our sins, having made the full atonement, and obtained eternal redemption for us, paying that ransom which is available not only for all past, but for all future transgressions to our lives' end; and not for our sins only, who were once, as Jews, his peculiar and covenant people; but for the sins of the whole world, of Gentile believers also, who were admitted to the participation of the same privileges, and become the children of God through faith in Jesus Christ. Note, (1.) The advocacy of Jesus is founded upon his everlasting righteousness, and perfect atonement, and therefore is ever available: no cause put into his hand can miscarry. (2.) Whilst with holy jealousy we war against sin, we must not, if at any time cast down, sink into despair: we have one before the throne, who ever liveth to make intercession for us, and God for his sake will abundantly pardon. (3.) Christ's salvation is universal to sinners of all ranks and nations, who come to God by him: none shall be in any wise cast out.

2. The rule of judgment concerning our real knowledge of Christ. And hereby we do know that we know him, and have the fullest demonstration of our real acquaintance with him, and of our genuine faith and love, if we keep his commandments, and unreservedly yield up ourselves to be guided by his holy word and will. He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, living in the allowed and habitual practice of iniquity, is a liar, and the truth is not in him, however confident his boasts may be, and however high his pretensions. But whoso keepeth his word, in doctrine and practice, faithfully desiring to correspond therewith in all things, in him verily is the love of God perfected; its prevailing influence, and unfeigned sincerity is hereby manifested; and by this know we that we are in him; vitally united to the living Head, eternally interested in all the privileges of his gospel, in which the hypocrite hath neither part nor lot. He that saith he abideth in him, ought himself also so to walk, even as he walked; copying the divine pattern, and, though at an humble distance, following the footsteps of the holy Jesus. Note, The profession of Christianity, without the practice of true godliness, is but an empty name. They who are truly Christ's will prove it not only in their lips, but by their lives.

7. Brethren, [i] I write no new commandment unto you, but an old commandment which ye had from the beginning. The old commandment is the word which ye have heard from the beginning. 8. Again, [k] a new commandment I write unto you, which thing is [l] true in him and in you: because [m] the darkness is past, and the true light now shineth. 9. He [n] that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now. 10. [o] He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is none * occasion of stumbling in him. 11. [p] But he that hateth his brother is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes.

Verses 7—11. The apostle in the most distinguishing character of true discipleship, and in obedience to the great command of the Divine Master, earnestly inculcates the great duty of brotherly love.

Brethren, I write no new commandment unto you, but remind you of an old commandment which ye had from the beginning; written upon the heart of man in innocence, and enforced in that revelation which God from the first made unto men. The old commandment is the word which ye have heard from the beginning, wherein love is enjoined as the fulfilling of the law. Again, a new commandment I write unto you, the same indeed in substance, but enforced by new motives, encouragements, assistances, and examples; which thing is true in him and in you; manifested most strikingly in that divine pattern of love which he set before you, and which you have in a gracious measure humbly imitated. Because the darkness of the former dispensation is past, and the true light now shineth, the Sun of righteousness is arisen, and the shadows are fled, the glorious gospel bringing us forth as if were into the meridian light of truth, and demanding from us a conversation suitable to the peculiar advantages which we enjoy. He that saith he is in the light, and professes faith in Jesus, the light of the world, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now, a stranger to the godlike spirit of charity which the gospel breathes, and covered with the black night of sin and error. He that loveth his brother, as a fellow-member of Christ's mystical body, and because he is the child of the same heavenly Father, abideth in the light of truth, and there is none occasion of stumbling in him; he will carefully avoid whatever would offend or weaken his brother's soul. But he that hateth his brother, and harbours an uncharitable, envious, proud, and revengeful disposition, is in darkness, under the evident dominion of Satan and sin: and walketh in darkness, all his ways being perverse before God: and knoweth not whither he goeth, nor is aware of the dreadful issue of his ways, because that the darkness of his fallen heart hath blinded his eyes to all the dire consequences of sin. Note, (1.) Charity is the distinguishing characteristic of the Christian. (2.) If there be any creature living, against whom we harbour allowed envy, malice, or revenge, in whose misery we should delight, or whose good we desire not to promote, we brand ourselves the children of darkness.

12. I write unto you, little children, [q] because your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake. 13. I write unto you, [r] fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I write unto you, [s] young men, because ye have overcome the wicked one. I [t] write unto you, little children, because ye have known the Father. 14. I have written unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I have written unto you, young men, because [u] ye are strong, and the word of God [x] abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one. 15. [y] Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. 16. [z] For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. 17. Verses 12—17. The great duty of love is equally the concern of all ranks and degrees of Christians, whatever their several attainments may be in the divine life.

1. He addresses himself to Christians in every stage of their profession.

I write unto you, little children, and as a powerful incentive to the exercise of charity, urge this duty upon you, because your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake; and having much forgiven, you should love much. Note, The lowest in the Christian life have received the free and full pardon of all their sins, this being the first great privilege of the gospel, of which every babe in Christ is immediately a partaker.

I write unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning, and by long acquaintance with his grace and love, are peculiarly called and engaged to show the same divine charity to others: and none are so far advanced, as not to need the word of exhortation.

I write unto you, young men, because ye have overcome the wicked one, and have been made more than conquerors over sin, and Satan, and the world, through him that loved you. And to impress more deeply my exhortation, I repeat my words,

I write unto you, little children, because ye have known the Father; and, young as you are in the Christian life, have tasted of the goodness and love of your heavenly Father. I have written unto you, fathers, grown old in the happy experience of the good ways of Christ, because ye have known him that is from the beginning, and entered deep into the mysteries of his everlasting grace, and his transcendent excellences. I have written unto you, young men, because ye are strong in faith and knowledge, and the exercise of every heavenly temper; and the word of God abideth in you, Christ being formed in your hearts, and his gospel dwelling in you richly, and influencing all your conversation; and ye have overcome the wicked one, and hitherto effectually defeated all his efforts against your souls, and will, I trust, go on still conquering and to conquer; and blessed are they who are thus strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might.

2. He solemnly warns them all, whatever their several attainments may be, to beware of this present evil world. Love not the world, set not your affections thereon; neither inordinately seek, nor be immoderately delighted with, the things that are in the world. If any man supremely love the world, and set his heart upon it, as his home and his happiness, the love of the Father is not in him; it is evident that such a one is not the object of his choice and regard; hath never experienced a sense of his love, nor felt any real heart-attachment to God in Christ, as his portion and exceeding great joy. For all that is in the world, to engage and seduce the heart from God, the lust of the flesh, whatever ministers to the lawless gratification of appetite, and leads to excess, sloth, intemperance, luxury, drunkenness, revellings, and every kind of impurity, and the lust of the eyes, the gain, possessions, wealth, and glittering riches which the covetous eye gazes upon with such rapture, and eager desire after; and the pride of life, the pomp and splendour of titles, show, equipages, honours, magnificence, which gratify the vanity, and inflame the ambition of the fallen mind: of all and either of these we must say, that it is not of the Father; worldly things were not given to be thus abused, nor are these the objects on which God's children place their affections; but we know, that each of these things is of the world; they are the flattering baits which the god of this world, the devil, spreads to insnare the sensual and earthly hearts of fallen men, and to seduce them from their true Lord and Master. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof; great and desirable as the things of it appear in the eye of sense, they are poor, perishing, unsatisfactory in the enjoyment, and transitory; often in time flying our grasp, and certainly at death must fail us; but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever; hath a more enduring substance; his fidelity to death shall be crowned with immortal life and glory; his pleasures in eternity shall be infinitely superior to all the delights of sense; and his inheritance above incorruptible, undefiled, and which fadeth not away. Oh! that thou mayest be wise, reader, and learn to weigh time and eternity, this world and the next, in the balance of the sanctuary!

18. Little children, it is the last time: [c] and as ye have heard that antichrist shall come, even now are there many antichrists; whereby we know that it is the last time. 19. [d] They went out from us, but they were not of us; for [e] if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us: but they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us. 20. [f] But ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye know all things. 21. [g] I have not written unto you because ye know not the truth, but because ye know it, and that no lie is of the truth. 22. [h] Who is a liar, but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? he is antichrist, that denieth the Father and the Son. 23. [i] Whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father: [but he that acknowledgeth the Son hath the Father also.] 24. [k] Let that therefore abide in you which ye have heard from the beginning. If that which ye have heard from the beginning shall [l] remain in you, ye also shall continue in the Son, and in the Father. 25. [m] And this is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life. 26. [n] These things have I written unto you concerning them that seduce you. 27. But [o] the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you; and [p] ye need not that any man teach you: but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in † him.

Verses 18—27. As the mystery of iniquity had begun already to work, the apostle,

1. Reminds them, that the Jewish dispensation was now ready to expire utterly with the destruction of their temple, city, and nation. Little children, it is the last time: and as ye have heard that antichrist shall come, even now are there many antichrists; either those who among the Jewish people set up themselves for the Messiah; or rather, who under the Christian profession opposed and denied the person, offices, and gospel of Christ; broaching their heretical tenets, and perverting many from the truth. They went out from us, from our communion and society;

but they were not of us, nor had ever truly been renewed by grace: for if they had been of us, and partakers of the like precious faith with us, they would no doubt have continued with us, and persevered in the principles and practice of the gospel: but they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us, but from the beginning were false-hearted professors, who never tasted of the grace of God in truth. Note, They who fall away finally, we may assuredly conclude, never were truly converted, whatever specious professions they might have made.

2. He encourages them to trust, and not to be afraid, since no seducers shall ever be able to move them from their steadfastness. But ye have an unction from the Holy One, from the Spirit of grace and truth, which, through the exalted Saviour, hath been bestowed upon you; and ye know all things necessary to preserve you from the wiles of deceivers, and to bring you to everlasting salvation. I have not written unto you because ye know not the truth, but because ye know it, and are established in the principles of the gospel, and the fundamental doctrines of Christ; and know that no lie is of the truth, but the very reverse, that it proves the hypocrisy and apostasy of those who by fraud and error would support their heretical doctrines. Note, They who are truly taught of God shall be preserved from every fatal delusion.

3. He particularly points out these seducers, by their tenets. Who is a liar, and to be deemed an impostor, but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ, rejecting him as the true Messiah? He is antichrist, and bears the brand of this hateful name, that denieth the Father and the Son, either confounding the persons in the Godhead, or dividing the substance; or denying that flood of evidence, wherewith God the Father hath borne witness to the mission and incarnation of his dear Son. Whosoever denieth the Son, his personality and essential Deity, or the office he bears as Mediator, the same hath not the Father, holds not the true doctrine of the persons in the undivided Godhead, and of the relation which God the Father bears to God the Son; and therein denies all that revelation which he hath made of pardon and reconciliation, through the substitution of the incarnate Redeemer; but he that acknowledges the Son, hath the Father also; he that receives the Lord Jesus by faith as the only Saviour, and confesses him to be the eternal Son of God, he hath the true knowledge of God the Father, and an interest in his favour and love.

[The last clause of this text is wanting in many editions, but appears in others of great authority, and is admitted into our version, though marked with Italics, as a supplement which elucidates the foregoing part of the verse.]

4. He exhorts them to cleave to the old truth, for novelty of doctrine is the sure proof of error. Let that therefore abide in you which ye have heard from the beginning, when the gospel was first preached unto you. If that which ye have heard from the beginning shall remain in you, ye also shall continue in the Son and in the Father, and holding the profession of your faith unwavering, shall enjoy the most happy communion with the Father through the Son, until you come to his kingdom in glory. And this is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life, which he will infallibly fulfil to those who abide in him, and will bring them to the beatific vision and enjoyment of his blessed self for ever and ever.

5. He mentions one great purpose of this epistle. These things have I written unto you concerning them that labour to seduce and pervert you from the simplicity which is in Christ. But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, the Spirit which he hath given you shall continue to teach, direct, and lead you aright; and ye need not that any man teach you; cannot want the help of those pretended wise men to instruct you above what is written; but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and hath opened your eyes to see in the revealed word all things that pertain unto life and godliness, and is truth, and is no lie, but directly contrary to the spirit of error which actuates these seducers: and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him, your living head, and continue under the blessed influence and guidance of his truth and grace unto the end.

28. And now, little children, [q] abide in him; that, [r] when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming. 29. If ye know that he is righteous, ‡ ye know that [s] every one that doeth righteousness is [t] born of him.

Verses 28, 29. From what he had said, the apostle closes with this affectionate exhortation to them:

And now, little children, abide in him, maintaining the closest communion with Jesus, and walking in the lively exercise of faith and hope, and love towards him, unmoved from the doctrines of his gospel by the wiles of deceivers: that when he shall appear on the throne of judgment at the last day, we may have confidence and boldness to appear in his presence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming, when we your ministers shall not be disappointed of our hopes, but meet you as our joy and crown, and, together with you, stand forth without fault, and blameless, acknowledged by him as his people, and admitted into the joy of our Lord. If, or since, ye know that he is righteous, perfectly righteous himself, the lover and author of all righteousness in his redeemed, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of him, and thereby gives a demonstration that he is a partaker of a divine nature, and hath the possession of spiritual life, which is the pledge of that which will be eternal. Note, (1.) They only will have boldness in a day of judgment who are found in Christ, and perseveringly cleave to him. (2.) Everlasting shame and contempt will cover those, who ungratefully, unfaithfully, and perversely have departed from the truth, and shall be disowned of Jesus in the day of his appearing and glory. (3.) The evidence of a divine nature must be manifested in a good conversation, for whatever conceits men may entertain of themselves, it is by their fruits they must be known.

CHAP. III.—ANNO DOMINI, 90.

The apostle here magnifies the love of God in our adoption, ver. 1. 2. He thereupon argues for holiness, ver. 3. and against sin, ver. 4—10. He presseth brotherly love, ver. 11—18. How to assure our hearts before God, ver. 19—22. The precept of faith, ver. 23. And the good of obedience, ver. 24.

1. BEHOLD, [a] what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, [b] that we should be called the sons of God! therefore [c] the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not. 2. Beloved, [d] now are we the sons of God, [e] and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but [f] we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we [g] shall see him as he is. 3. And [h] every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure.

Verses 1—3. The apostle here,

1. Breaks forth with admiration in the view of the love of God toward his people. Behold, with wonder and amaze; what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, in Jesus Christ, that we, by nature and practice so vile, corrupt, and sinful, should, notwithstanding, be adopted into his family, and be called the sons of God, advanced to that transcendent dignity and honour: therefore the world, who have their minds wholly engrossed with sensible objects, and have no discernment of spiritual things, knoweth us not; far from esteeming and valuing us, they deride and persecute us for that image which we bear, because it knew him not, they are ignorant of God; and when his Son appeared incarnate, they nailed him to a tree. Note, (1.) The meanest child of God hath a dignity infinitely greater than the first-born of princes. (2.) It will be matter of everlasting wonder and praise to the redeemed, that ever God should set his love upon them. (3.) If we are treated with derision and contempt by this wicked world, we should remember the cross which Jesus bore, and be ashamed to murmur.

2. He declares the high expectations of God's children. Beloved, now are we the sons of God; this is our present honour; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: greater blessedness is in store for us than eye hath seen, or ear heard, or it hath entered into the heart of man to conceive: but we know that, when he shall appear, who is our head, even Christ, we shall be like him, admitted to his presence, and partakers of all his glory: for we shall see him as he is, and our bodies as well as souls shall be fashioned after his bright image. Note, The day of judgment will be a day of triumph to every redeemed soul; then at least they shall be perfected in holiness and happiness for ever.

3. Such a hope cannot but have the most powerful influence upon our conduct. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure, setting Christ's glorious pattern before him, and earnestly desirous to obtain a holy conformity to him in all things. Note, The hope that doth not lead us to holiness, is but the hope of the hypocrite, which perisheth.

4. Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law: [i] for sin is the transgression of the law. 5. And ye know that [k] he was manifested to take away our sins; and in him is no sin. 6. [l] Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not: whosoever sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him. 7. Little children, [m] let no man deceive you: he that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous. 8. [n] He that committeth sin is of the devil: for the devil sinneth from the beginning. [o] For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil. 9. Whosoever is born of God [p] doth not commit sin; for his [q] seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God. 10. [r] In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil: Whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother.

Verses 4—10. Nothing can more strongly urge the believer to strive against sin, than the arguments which the apostle here urges upon him.

1. Sin is the breach of God's holy law. Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law: for sin is the transgression of the law. Every deviation from that perfect rule brings guilt upon the conscience, and so far clouds our hope; and where sin is the allowed practice, there all hope towards God must be delusion.

2. The very end of Christ's redemption was to cleanse us from all iniquity. And ye know that he was manifested in the flesh on purpose to take away our sins, both the guilt of them from the conscience, and to break the power of them in our hearts; and in him is no sin: all, therefore, who belong to him, must show that the design of his incarnation is answered respecting them, in their deliverance from the bondage of corruption, and in their growing conformity to his blessed image.

3. An allowed and habitual course of sin is utterly contradictory to real union with Christ. Whosoever abideth in him, as the branch in the vine, deriving constant supplies of grace out of his fulness, sinneth not with freedom, choice, delight, and perseverance, but hates sin as the greatest evil, and desires to keep at the greatest distance from it: whosoever sinneth determinedly with satisfaction, and full purpose to abide in the practice of it, hath not seen him, neither known him, but is an utter stranger to Christ, and his great salvation.

4. It is the most fatal deceit to imagine, that without the practice of righteousness we can ever be like him or with him. Little children, let no man deceive you with any vain suggestions: he that doeth righteousness, in the constant and habitual course of his temper and conduct, and conscientiously towards God and man desires to be found without offence, he is righteous, even as He is righteous, and thus resembles in a measure the Holy One of God.

5. The allowed and avowed practice of sin is a virtual compact with the devil, and renunciation of Jesus Christ. He that committeth sin, as his trade, delight, and choice, is of the devil, bears his image, and is under his influence, for the devil sinneth from the beginning, was the author of evil, and continues to spread the dreadful poison; having tempted angels from their allegiance, and seduced man in paradise, with unrelenting malice he persists in labouring for men's eternal ruin. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil, and rescue his people from Satan's hateful power, breaking his yoke from off their neck now, and by and by destroying the very being of sin in them: all who are his chosen, therefore, experience his power, and are delivered from the bonds of the wicked one.

6. Every regenerate soul cannot but renounce his connection with iniquity. Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; it is contrary to that divine nature which he hath received; and he can never sin in the same manner that he did before; for his seed remaineth in him; he has that principle of grace implanted in his heart, that makes sin odious and hateful to him: and he cannot sin; not that he is literally impeccable, but that the new nature he hath received is utterly averse to it, opposes the carnal mind, and never suffers him to rest under the power of evil, because he is born of God.

7. In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil; their works always evidence what spirit is in them: whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, hath no part nor lot in his kingdom, neither he that loveth not his brother; these two things, neglect of godliness, and an uncharitable spirit, are the sure bands of Satan's slaves.

Verses 11—22. The apostle having mentioned the want of brotherly love as the sure evidence of exclusion from God's favour, enforces the practice of that most excellent of graces, charity. For,

1. This is the message that ye heard from the beginning, and one of the chief precepts of the Redeemer, that we should love one another.

2. He mentions the dire example of the wicked Cain, to show the hatefulness of such a spirit as he possessed. Not as Cain, who was of that wicked one, a child of the devil, and slew his brother. And wherefore slew he him? Because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous, and he could not bear the rebukes of his pious example, and the approbation which God testified of Abel's sacrifice, when his own was rejected. And if this was the case so early, and the enmity between the seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent appeared then so malignant, marvel not, my brethren, that the world hate you; the same diabolical nature will produce exactly similar effects. Note, (1.) Anger, envy, and hatred in the heart, is murder begun. (2.) We need not wonder at the world's enmity; such is the lot of all the saints.

3. Brotherly love is the sure proof of our spiritual life. We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren; to love them as children of God, and for the sake of him whose image they bear, evidences the life of God in our own souls.

4. The contrary is a sure sign of the remaining power of spiritual death over the soul. He that loveth not his brother abideth in death, in a state of nature, and of wrath under the curse of the law. For whosoever hateth his brother is, in the eye of the law, a murderer; and ye know that no murderer, who continues under the power of his malignant spirit, hath eternal life abiding in him, nor the least prospect of attaining it; eternal death is the wages of his sin.

5. The love of Jesus to us should engage our love to our brethren. Hereby perceive we the love of God, the Son towards us, because he laid down his life for us on the accursed tree; an instance of love so stupendous, as passes all understanding; and we, animated by such an example, ought, if duty so require, to lay down our lives for the brethren; and if our lives must readily be offered for their service, how much more our substance, when their necessities call for our relief? But whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? Such a conduct must necessarily show the absence of that divine principle, and prove the hypocrisy of every pretension to the high relation of children of God. My little children, let us not love in word, nor in tongue, merely, but give the more substantial evidences of our charity in deed and in truth, acting according to our professions, with an open hand and open heart towards every Christian brother, for his sake whose love we in common share.

6. And hereby we know that we are of the truth; such a conversation demonstrates the reality of our interest in the redemption which is in Jesus Christ, and shall assure our hearts before him, bearing witness to our simplicity and godly sincerity, and giving us rejoicing in the testimony of our conscience. For if our heart condemn us of allowed hypocrisy, and we cannot stand before our own tribunal within, God is greater than our hearts, and knoweth all things, and must therefore much more condemn us, as his piercing eyes can discover hidden iniquities which we pass by unregarded. Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, not the stupified hearts, and seared consciences of the unregenerate, but the enlightened minds of the faithful, where, though many infirmities may be seen and lamented, allowed guile is not harboured, this consciousness of our simplicity gives an humble boldness to the soul, and then have we confidence towards God, a holy freedom and liberty of soul in our approaches to a throne of grace. And whatsoever we ask, we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight, asking always according to his will, and aiming at his glory in all our conversation.

23. And [i] this is his commandment, That we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, [k] and love one another, as he gave us commandment. 24. And [l] he that keepeth his commandments dwelleth in him, and he in him. [m] And hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us.

Verses 23, 24. We have here,

1. The great commandment of the gospel. And this is his commandment, (1.) That we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, as the only and all-sufficient Saviour of lost sinners, renouncing every other hope and dependence, and with satisfaction resting our souls on him for pardon and acceptance with God: and, (2.) That we should, in consequence of faith in him, love one another, as he gave us commandment, exercising the most enlarged, unfeigned, and cordial affection towards all the members of his body mystical in particular, and showing a general benevolence to mankind.

2. Great will be the blessedness resulting from hence. And he that keepeth his commandments, from this principle of faith which worketh by love, dwelleth in him, and He in him, abiding in a state of vital union with the exalted Jesus: and hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us, whose mighty energy effectually influences our hearts and conduct, and who bears witness to his own work to our increasing comfort and joy.

CHAP. IV.—ANNO DOMINI, 90.

In this chapter the apostle exhorts to try the spirits, ver. 1. Gives a note to try by, ver. 2, 3. Shows who are of the world, and who of God, ver. 4—6. Urges Christian love by divers considerations, ver. 7—16. Describes our love to God, and the effects of it, ver. 17—21.

1. BELOVED, [a] believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world. 2. [b] Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God: 3. [c] And every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God: and this is that spirit of antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world.

Verses 1—3. The apostle,

1. Warns them against seducing teachers. Beloved, believe not every spirit, nor credit rashly each pretender to inspiration: but try the spirits, by the infallible oracles of truth, whether they are of God, and speak agreeably to his revealed will: because many false prophets are gone out into the world, and we need be on our guard, proving all things, and holding fast that which is good.

2. He gives them a certain rule to direct their judgment in this matter. Hereby know ye the Spirit of God, and those who are influenced by it: every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, or that confesseth Jesus Christ, who is come in the flesh, receiving him in his divine person and mediatorial character and offices as the true Messiah, from whom alone life and salvation are to be expected, he is of God, and speaks according to his mind and will. And every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, but denies his divine glory, his real incarnation, and mediatorial undertaking, is not of God, but is under the spirit of Satan and delusion: and this is that spirit of antichrist, that is, enmity against Christ and his gospel, whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world, the mystery of iniquity having already begun to work, and wo to those over whom it prevails!

4. [d] Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them: because [e] greater is he that is in you, than [f] he that is in the world. 5. [g] They are of the world: therefore speak they of the world, and the world heareth them. 6. [h] We are of God: [i] he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us. [k] Hereby know we the spirit of truth and the spirit of error.

Verses 4—6. To encourage them against the fears of being drawn aside by seducers, the apostle,

1. Assures them, that as they belonged to God, they were safe. Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them hitherto, and shall be still superior to all their arts: because greater is he that is in you than he that is in the world, and he will preserve you from the power of evil.

2. He describes these seducers. They are of the world; whatever pretences they make, they are wholly engrossed and influenced by the riches, honours, and pleasures of this life; therefore speak they of the world, expect a temporal Messiah, and seek a worldly kingdom, and the world heareth them, greedily drinking in a doctrine so suited to their carnal hearts.

3. He shows the different character of God's true ministers and people. We are of God, appointed by him, and owned of him, having his glory singly in view, and walking under the guidance and influence of his word and Spirit: he that knoweth God, heareth us, and receives our testimony as divine: he that is not of God, not enlightened by him nor born of him, heareth not us, disregarding our doctrine and counting it foolishness. Hereby know we the spirit of truth and the spirit of error. Note, They who reject the warnings of God's ministers, speaking according to his holy word, evidently show themselves to be under the spirit of error.

7. [l] Beloved, let us love one another: [m] for love is of God; [n] and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God. 8. [o] He that loveth not knoweth not God; [p] for God is love. 9. [q] In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him. 10. [r] Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins. 11. Beloved, [s] if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another. 12. [t] No man hath seen God at any time. [u] If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us. 13. [x] Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit.

Verses 7—13. The apostle returns to recommend the exercise of fervent charity, as the genuine evidence of a right spirit. Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God, his genuine offspring, and his brightest image: and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God; he evidences hereby his experimental acquaintance with God, and shows himself a child of his family of love. He that loveth not knoweth not God, whatever he may pretend, for God is love, and the true knowledge of him hath ever a transforming efficacy, to change us into his blessed image. In this was manifested the love of God towards us, and shone forth with the most distinguished lustre, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, to become incarnate, to live and die for us, that we might live through him, redeemed from the sentence of death, quickened to newness of life, and through his divine righteousness entitled to immortal bliss and glory. Herein is love, surpassing strange! not that we loved God, no; just the reverse; we were sinners, ungodly, enemies; but even when we had every thing which could render us the objects of his loathing, even then, that he might magnify the wonders of his grace, he loved us, and gave the most astonishing demonstration of it, when he sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins, with his own blood making atonement for us, and purging us from our iniquities by this amazing sacrifice. Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another. Who can possibly offend us so highly as we have offended God? yet he forgives and pardons abundantly; yea, he spared not his own Son, but freely gave him up for us all: what then can we withhold from our brethren, when we have such an example before us? Surely, if we belong to him, we shall be like him, and prove it by this Spirit of love. No man indeed, hath seen God at any time, for he is a spirit, invisible and incorporeal. But if we love one another, God dwelleth in us; by his Spirit manifesting his presence in our hearts; and his love is perfected in us, our love to him is proved to be sincere and genuine, and will grow up unto absolute perfection in glory. Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit, whereby we become one with him, united to him in faith and love, and experiencing the most gracious manifestations of his presence with our souls. Thou God of life and love, give me more abundantly of this blessed Spirit!

[c] God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him.

Verses 14—16. We have here,

1. The apostolic testimony. And we have seen and do testify that the Father sent the Son, in his infinite grace and love, to be the Saviour of the world, of both Jews and Gentiles, even of all that believe in him without exception.

2. The true evangelical confession. Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, owning him as the divine and true Messiah, and making open profession of his faith, in the face of every danger, God dwelleth in him and he in God, being happily joined to him in one spirit for eternity.

3. The experience of all true Christians. And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us, the astonishing manifestation of which, in sending his Son, leaves us no room to doubt of his transcendent and distinguishing grace towards us. God is love, pure, perfect love, and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him; there subsists a holy union between them, and it will be everlasting.

17. [d] Herein is * our love made perfect, [e] that we may have boldness in the day of judgment: because [f] as he is, so are we in this world. 18. [g] There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear: because fear hath torment. He that feareth is not made perfect in love. 19. [h] We love him because he first loved us. 20. [i] If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? 21. And [k] this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God love his brother also.

Verses 17—21. The apostle proceeds to set forth the blessed effects of Christian love. Herein is our love made perfect, proved to be genuine and sincere, by our union of heart to God, and charity to the brethren; and where this is the case, then, it becomes evident that we are born of God.

1. We may have boldness in the day of judgment, and confidently appear before the throne of Jesus, assured of acceptance in that great day: because, as he is, so are we in this world, and he cannot but receive into the bosom of his love those who bear his own bright image.

2. We are delivered from all slavish fear. There is no fear in love, nothing distressing, terrifying, and servile, but perfect love casteth out fear, a real consciousness of love to God, and of an interest in his favour, silences all fearful apprehensions of death or judgment: because fear hath torment, and where it prevails, must make the soul miserable and unhappy: he that feareth, and trembles before God as his enemy, is not made perfect in love, nor hath yet seen him in the delightful character of a reconciled God and Father. We love him, because he first loved us; his love shed abroad in the heart, must kindle ours, and the view of those amazing manifestations of it which he hath made, should every day add fuel to the sacred fire, and raise the flame of holy affections still higher and higher, till at last we are wholly assimilated to his image, and made absolutely perfect in love.

3. Love to God necessarily includes love to the brethren. If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar; his uncharitableness proves the hypocrisy of his pretensions: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, with his bodily eyes, and beheld his distresses, which should excite compassion; or the divine image in him, which should engage his regards; how can he love God whom he hath not seen? how absurd is the supposition! And this commandment we have from him, that he who loveth God, love his brother also, and prove thereby the unfeigned sincerity of his professions.

cometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?

Verses 1—5. The apostle shows,

1. The genuine marks of a child of God. Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ, the true Messiah, placing his whole dependence for pardon, life, and salvation upon him, is born of God, adopted into his blessed family, and dignified with all the honours of a son and heir of the Almighty: and every one that loveth him that begat, the blessed God, the Author of all grace to his people, loveth him also that is begotten of him, and delights in his image wherever it appears.

2. By this we know that we love the children of God, as his children, and purely for his sake, when we love God unfeignedly, and keep his commandments from a principle of faith which worketh by love. For this is the love of God, the most undoubted evidence of it, that we keep his commandments; counting them all holy, just, and good, and having respect unto them without partiality or hypocrisy; and his commandments are not grievous; love makes the labour light, and the obedience cheerful and willing.

3. This is what will gain the conquest over an insnaring world. For whatsoever is born of God, and partakes of a new and a divine nature, overcometh the world, and triumphs over both its terrors and allurements: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith, which realizing unseen and eternal things, stamps vanity upon all present objects; and deriving strength from the Redeemer's fulness, enables us to be more than conquerors over all our trials. Who is he that overcometh the world? none ever did or can, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God; and dependent upon him for life and salvation, holds on his heavenly way, and is neither to be seduced nor terrified from his holy profession. Lord, give and increase this victorious faith!

6. [h] This is he that came by water and blood, even Jesus Christ; not by water only, but by water and blood. And [i] it is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth. 7. [k] For there are three that bear record in heaven, the [l] Father, the [m] Word, and the [n] Holy Ghost: and these three are [o] one. 8. And there are three that bear witness in earth; [p] the spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these three agree in one. 9. [q] If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater: for this is the witness of God which he hath testified of his Son.

Verses 6—9. Faith in the divine Messiah being of such essential consequence to our souls, we have here the foundation on which this faith is built.

1. This is he that came by water and blood, even Jesus Christ; not by water only, but by water and blood: he at his baptism entered upon his office, and on the cross finished the great atonement; and the blood and water which flowed from his wounded side declared the purposes of his coming, both to pay a ransom for our sins, and to cleanse us from the defilement of them, by the renovation of our nature through the mighty energy of his Spirit; for which glorious purposes faith looks to Jesus Christ, as appointed of the Father to his mediatorial office, and able and willing in both these respects to perfect the salvation of his people.

2. Christ hath the strongest attestation borne to his divine person and character. It is the Spirit that beareth witness, in the miraculous powers bestowed upon the ministers of the gospel, and to the consciences of believers; because the Spirit is truth itself, and his testimony cannot deceive. For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost; the Father, at his baptism and transfiguration, bore witness to him; the Son repeatedly asserted his own divine glory and office, and appealed to the miracles he wrought, for a proof of the truth of what he advanced; the Holy Ghost, by his descent on Jesus at his baptism, and the miraculous powers with which he invested the apostles and others, added his full attestation to the great Redeemer: and these three, though personally distinct, are, in essence, one. And there are three that bear witness on earth; the Spirit, in his gifts and graces; the water, wherewith every believer is baptized in the name of the Son of God, as a divine person; and the blood, which Jesus shed upon the cross, and instituted in his last supper a constant memorial of it to be observed in his church: and these three agree in one, and bear testimony to the divine character and complete redemption of our adored Immanuel. If we receive the witness of men, attesting any fact, and every court of human judicature admits their oath and evidence as satisfactory; the witness of God is greater, which both Father, Son, and Spirit, severally bear to the dignity and glory of the Lord Jesus, and with whom the appointed witnesses on earth agree: for this is the witness of God, which he hath testified of his Son, as the true and divine Messiah, whom we by faith and love must embrace, and in whom alone salvation can be attained.

10. He that believeth on the Son of God [r] hath the witness in himself: he that believeth not God [s] hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. 11. And this is the record, [t] that God hath given to us eternal life; [u] and this life is in his Son. 12. [x] He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life. 13. [y] These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on [z] the name of the Son of God.

Verses 10—13. We have here,

1. The happy state of the true believer. He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself; he feels the suitableness of the Saviour to his state of guilt and misery, and knows by happy experience his excellence, fulness, and all-sufficiency. He that believeth not God, and receiveth not his testimony concerning his only begotten Son, hath made him a liar, and denied his truth, because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son, and submits not to the witness which he hath borne to the character of Jesus as the true Messiah.

2. The perpetuity of his felicity. And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life; the earnest, foretaste, and beginning of it, and the sure title to it through the Redeemer's righteousness; and this life is in his Son, secured by him, treasured up in him, and communicated from him to his people. He that hath the Son, is by faith united to him, and interested in his redemption, hath life; hath spiritual life here, and possesses the title to eternal life hereafter: and he that hath not the Son of God, doth not by faith embrace him, and derive grace from him, hath not life, is dead in trespasses and sins, and the wrath of God abideth on him.

3. The knowledge he hath of his invaluable privileges. These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life; and rejoice in this distinguished gift of God; and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God; engaged more steadfastly to cleave to him, and with unshaken perseverance maintaining your holy profession. Note, (1.) That we have life, eternal life in Christ Jesus, is to be known: the Lord seal this knowledge to our consciences! (2.) They who have begun well should be encouraged to persevere, assured that their labour shall not be in vain in the Lord.

14. And this is the confidence that we have * in him, that, [a] if we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us: 15. [b] And if we know that he hear us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him. 16. [c] If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, [d] he shall ask, and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death. There is a sin unto death: [e] I do not say that he shall pray for it. 17. [f] All unrighteousness is sin: and [g] there is a sin not unto death.

Verses 14—17. The apostle adds to all the other blessings flowing from faith in Christ,

1. Access to God in prayer, and the sure answer to all our petitions. And this is the confidence that we have in him, and boldness to approach a throne of grace; that if we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us; accepts our prayers, and will grant our requests. And if we know that he hear us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him, in manner, time, and measure bestowed, as he sees most for his own glory and our good. Note, (1.) If we would obtain an answer to our prayers, God's revealed will must be the rule of them. (2.) When we pray in faith, we may confidently rest ourselves upon God's promise: he will hear and help us.

2. Our prayers for others, as well as for ourselves, shall meet with kind acceptance. If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death; though it deserves death as its wages, yet is not in its nature unpardonable; he shall ask God to pardon his offending brother, and he shall, in answer to his prayer, give him life for them that sin not unto death, and renew them again unto repentance. There is a sin unto death, which never can be forgiven, either in this life, or in that which is to come: I do not say that he shall pray for it: blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, and wilful apostasy, seem to be beyond the reach of prayer. All unrighteousness indeed is sin; and if God were to execute his righteous law on the offender, he must perish. But every sin is not unpardonable: there is a sin not unto death, for which prayer can be available, and pardon and restoration may be obtained. What an encouragement is this to fervent and ceaseless intercession on the behalf of others!

18. [h] We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not; but he that is begotten of God [i] keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not. 19. And [k] we know that we are of God, and [l] the whole world lieth in [m] wickedness. 20. And [n] we know that the Son of God is come, [o] and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true: [p] and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. Verses 18—21. The apostle concludes,

1. With a recapitulation of the believer's privileges and practice. We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not that unpardonable sin, nor continues allowedly in any course of iniquity; but he that is begotten of God, and thus partaker of a new and divine nature, keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not; the power of Satan is broken, and he never can again bring the redeemed soul into the like condemnation with himself that it should perish by apostasy. Note, A truly regenerate soul can never die eternally.

2. He mentions their happy separation from the world. And we know that we are of God; his children; renewed in the spirit of our minds, and separated for him to be a peculiar people from the corrupted mass of mankind: and the whole world beside lieth in wickedness, (εν τω πονηρω) in the wicked one, under his power, influence, and dominion, and must be condemned together with him. Note, It is most indubitably certain, that the far greater part of the world, even the Christian world, lieth in wickedness: and as certain, that they will perish everlastingly. It becomes us therefore seriously to inquire, whether we are of the world: for then must we be condemned with the world. When but few shall be saved, it should awaken our solicitude to be of that few.

3. They knew the Son of God, and enjoyed a blessed union with him. And we know that the Son of God is come, in the human nature, to take away our sins by the sacrifice of himself; and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true, by his Spirit opening the eyes of our mind, and shining into our hearts, to give us the light of the knowledge of his glory: and we are in him that is true, vitally united to him who is the truth itself: even in his Son Jesus Christ, as living members of his mystical body. And this Jesus is the true God, the self-existent Jehovah, and eternal life, the purchaser, fountain, and bestower of it on all his people; and they who know him now by faith, will live eternally with him in glory. Note, (1.) Either Jesus Christ is the true God, or the scriptures are a fiction. (2.) They who know him as their Saviour, by real union of heart with him, can never perish, but shall have everlasting life.

4. He closes with a solemn admonition. Little children, dear to me as the offspring of eternal love, keep yourselves from idols; abhorring and avoiding the hated idolatry of paganism, and the use of images as mediums of worship, and let the triune God be the only object of your adoration. Amen.

A PRACTICAL COMMENT

UPON THE

JOHN.

Introduction.

SINCE in Christ Jesus there is neither male nor female, but all, without distinction of sex, are admitted to the privileges of the gospel, we need not wonder to have an inspired epistle directed to an honourable matron and her children. The style marks the penman, and the similitude of expression shows him to be the same who wrote the foregoing Epistle, and probably about the same time; accordingly it hath been generally received in the church as canonical.

ANNO DOMINI, 90.

The apostle here salutes an honourable matron and her children ver. 1—3. Recommends to them faith and love, ver. 5, 6. Warns them of deceivers, ver. 7. and to take heed to themselves, ver. 8. Teaches how to treat those that bring not the doctrine of Christ, ver. 10, 11. And referring other things to personal discourse, concludes the epistle, ver. 12, 13.

1. THE [a] elder unto the [b] elect lady and her children, whom [c] I love in the truth: and not I only, but also all they that have known the truth; 2. [d] For the truth's sake, which dwelleth in us, and shall be with us for ever. 3. [e] Grace be with you, mercy, and peace, from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Father, [f] in truth and love. 4. [g] I rejoiced greatly that I found of thy children walking in truth, as we have received a commandment from the Father. 5. And now I beseech thee, lady, [h] not as though I wrote a new commandment unto thee, but that which we had from the beginning, that we love one another. 6. [i] And this is love, that we walk after his commandments. This is the commandment, That, as ye have heard from the beginning, ye should walk in it.

Verses 1—6. The epistle opens,

1. With the inscription. The elder, John, now far advanced in age, and by office an elder, as well as an apostle, unto the elect lady, chosen among the not many noble, to be a partaker of the gospel salvation; and to her children, heirs with her of the same promises; whom I love in the truth, unfeignedly, and for the sake of him whose image they bear: and not I only, but also all they that have known the truth, who cannot but respect and delight in those who adorn so eminently the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things: for the truth's sake which dwelleth in us, which renders the possessor more respectable than all riches, birth, or titles: and shall be with us for ever; for this truth is an incorruptible seed, and, where planted in the heart, springs up into eternal life.

2. We have the apostolic benediction. Grace be with you, in all its happy fruits and effects, of pardon, strength, and consolation, with mercy and peace, and every blessing that we can ask, or the Lord hath promised to give, from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, to whom we are indebted for all, and who is the Son of the Father, in truth and love; one with him in essence and glory, the divine Son of the divine Father, and the object of his eternal love.

3. His congratulation. I rejoiced greatly, that I found of thy children walking in truth, as it is in Jesus, and in their spirit and conduct a credit to the holy profession which they make, guided by the oracles of God, as we have received a commandment from the Father. Note, (1.) It is a singular joy to ministers, to behold the rising generation ornaments to religion. (2.) We then walk in the truth, when we make God's word our constant rule of conduct.

4. His request and exhortation. And now I beseech thee, lady, as the chief design of my epistle, not as though I wrote a new commandment unto thee, but that which we had from the beginning, that we love one another, out of a pure heart fervently, from the divine principle of faith which worketh by love. And this is love, the infallible test of true love to God and man, that we walk after his commandments, with a universal and conscientious respect to all his holy will. This is the commandment, that, as ye have heard from the beginning, ye should walk in it, under the influence of this great law of love. Note, Kind exhortations are preferable to authoritative commands, and usually much more available.

7. [k] For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an antichrist. 8. [l] Look to yourselves, that we lose not those things which we have * wrought, but that we receive a full reward. 9. [m] Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son. 10. [n] If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed: 11. For he that biddeth him God speed is [o] partaker of his evil deeds. 12. [p] Having many things to write unto you, I would not write with paper and ink: but I trust to come unto you, and speak † face to face, that [q] our joy may be full. 13. The children of thy [r] elect sister greet thee. Amen.

Verses 7—13. The apostle proceeds,

1. To warn and guard this honoured family against the wiles of seducers. For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, broaching the most fatal and heretical doctrines, as that Jesus Christ assumed not a real human nature, but lived and died in appearance only; or that he who was born at Nazareth was not the true expected Messiah. This is a deceiver and an antichrist, an avowed enemy to the Redeemer's glory and gospel, and a destroyer of the souls of men. Therefore look to yourselves with holy jealousy and watchfulness, that we lose not those things which we have wrought, and be at last disappointed of our hopes of you, whilst you come finally short of the grace of God, and, after all the most promising appearances, be seduced by the error of the wicked; but hold fast the truth, and, whereunto ye have already attained, walk by the same rule, mind the same things, that we receive a full reward, when you shall appear our joy and crown in the great day, and we with you shall obtain the glorious recompense promised to those who are faithful unto death. Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God, is not influenced by his Spirit, and hath no part in his salvation: he that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, with regard to his divine person, real incarnation, mediatorial offices, and complete redemption, professing boldly his faith in defiance of all opposition, he hath both the Father and the Son, is admitted into a holy and happy communion with them, and hath the most assured interest in their love and favour.

2. They are enjoined not to give the least countenance to these seducers. If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, nor afford him ought of that hospitable entertainment which you kindly give to the faithful ministers of Christ; neither bid him Godspeed, nor wish the least success to such ungodly attempts as the propagation of these poisonous errors; for he that biddeth him God speed, is partaker of his evil deeds, and an abettor of his wickedness. Note, We need to be very cautious not only to keep from evil ourselves, but to avoid being partakers of other men's sins.

3. He concludes with informing the lady, that he hoped shortly to have a more full personal conference with her on this subject. Having many things to write unto you, I would not write with paper and ink; but I trust to come unto you, and speak face to face, more at large; that our joy may be full, and we may be happy together in the experience of the true grace of God, and be preserved from all deluders. The children of thy elect sister greet thee! How happy is it where grace thus diffuses itself through a whole family, and those who are united by the ties of blood are thus more nearly united in the bonds of God's everlasting love! Amen! Would to God that this were the case in every family!

A PRACTICAL COMMENT

UPON THE

THIRD EPISTLE

JOHN.

Introduction.

The epistle to Gaius, like the former, is written to an individual; but of general use to the church, and universally admitted as canonical. Whether this Gaius is the same whom the apostle Paul calls his host, (Rom. xvi. 23.) is uncertain.

ANNO DOMINI, 90.

In this epistle the apostle congratulates Gaius upon the prosperity of his soul, ver. 1, 2. Upon the fame he had among good Christians, ver. 3, 4. Upon his charity and hospitality to the servants of Christ, ver. 5, 6. He complains of contemptuous treatment by the ambitious Diotrephes, ver. 9, 10. Recommends Demetrius, ver. 12. And hopes to visit Gaius shortly, ver. 13, 14.

1. THE [a] elder unto the well-beloved [b] Gaius, [c] whom I love * in the truth. 2. Beloved, [d] I † wish above all things that thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as [e] thy soul prospereth. 3. For [f] I rejoiced greatly, when the brethren came and testified of [g] the truth that is in thee, even as thou walkest in the truth. 4. I have no greater joy than to hear that [h] my children [i] walk in truth. 5. Beloved, [k] thou doest faithfully whatsoever thou doest to the brethren, and to strangers; 6. Which have borne witness of thy charity before the church; whom if [l] thou bring forward on their journey after a godly sort, thou shalt do well: 7. [m] Because that for his name's sake they went forth, taking nothing of the Gentiles. 8. [n] We therefore ought to receive such, that we might be [o] fellow-helpers to the truth.

Verses 1—8. We have here,

1. The inscription and salutation. The elder, John, unto the well-beloved Gaius, whom I love in the truth, as a faithful member of Jesus Christ. Beloved, I wish above all things, that thou mayest prosper, and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth; and may thy success in all temporal things, and thy bodily health, bear pace with thy spiritual prosperity. Note, (1.) The true prosperity, and that which is most desirable, is the health of the soul. (2.) Bodily health is a singular mercy, especially as it enables us more eminently to improve our spiritual gifts and graces for the good of mankind.

2. He testifies the satisfaction he felt in the report which he had heard. For I rejoiced greatly when the brethren came and testified of the truth that is in thee, of thy faith and love unfeigned; even as thou walkest in the truth, adorning with all manner of holy conversation thy Christian profession. I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in the truth. Note, It is a most sincere and heartfelt delight to every faithful minister of Christ to behold the children, whom they have begotten in the gospel, walk worthy of their vocation.

3. He commends his kind and charitable conduct. Beloved, thou doest faithfully whatsoever thou doest to the brethren, and to strangers; such hospitality and generosity are the genuine characteristics of thy faithful heart, and have been justly praised by those who have borne witness of thy charity before the church, and gratefully acknowledged the kindnesses which they have received: whom if thou bring forward on their journey after a godly sort, and assist those itinerant preachers of the gospel who devote their time and labour to this blessed work of spreading the glad tidings through the earth, thou shalt do well, and act a noble part in thus advancing the blessed cause of our divine Redeemer; because that for his name's sake they went forth, giving up all the world, that they might addict themselves wholly to the ministry, and with a spirit uninfluenced by any mercenary views, taking nothing of the Gentiles, but preaching the gospel of God freely. We therefore, who wish well to that service, and whom God hath blessed with ability, ought to receive such, and afford them a comfortable maintenance; that we might be fellow-helpers to the truth, and, though not ordained to be preachers, may hereby receive a preacher's reward. Note, They who devote themselves to the ministry, foregoing all worldly pursuits for the love of Christ and of immortal souls, deserve every kindness at our hands that we can show them.

9. I wrote unto the church: but Diotrephes, who [p] loveth to have the pre-eminence among them, ‡ receiveth us not. 10. Wherefore, if I come, [q] I will remember his deeds which he doeth, prating against us with malicious words: and not content therewith, neither doth he himself receive the brethren, and forbiddeth them that would, and casteth them out of the church. 11. Beloved, [r] follow not that which is evil, but that which is good. [s] He that doeth good is of God: but he that doeth evil hath not seen God. 12. Demetrius hath [t] good report of all men, and of the truth itself: yea, and we also bear record; and ye know that [u] our record is true. 13. [x] I had many things to write, but I will not with ink and pen write unto thee: 14. But I trust I shall shortly see thee, and we shall speak ‖ face to face. Peace be to thee. Our friends salute thee. Greet the friends by name.

Verses 9—14. The apostle here,

1. Points out a man of a very different character. I wrote unto the church, or, as some render the words, I would have wrote unto the church; but Diotrephes, who loveth to have the pre-eminence among them, and proudly lords it over them, receiveth us not, and pays no regard to our apostolic injunctions. Wherefore, if, or when, I come, I will remember his deeds which he doeth, and sincerely animadvert upon his imperious and uncharitable conduct, prating against us with malicious words, assuming the most insolent airs, and daring even to cast reproach on the divinely constituted apostles of the Son of God: and not content therewith, neither doth he himself receive the brethren to any hospitable entertainment in his house, and forbiddeth them that would; and, when any, notwithstanding, disobey his mandates, and receive, assist, and further in their way, those faithful ministers of Christ, who travel preaching his gospel, he casteth them out of the church, merely for presuming to disobey his wicked commands, and usurped authority. Note, (1.) Nothing is more contrary to the spirit of a Christian minister, than overbearing arrogance and pride. (2.) They are doubly wicked, who neither will do good themselves, nor allow those who are willing to do it.

2. He dissuades Gaius from copying so bad an example. Beloved, follow not that which is evil, but that which is good; let no height of station or office lead you to copy a bad man, but ever imitate the excellent and the generous. He that doeth good is of God, proves that he is born of him, and partakes of his Spirit:

but he that doeth evil hath not seen God; whatever pretensions to religion he may make, he is a stranger to all experimental knowledge of divine things.

3. He mentions Demetrius as an excellent man, and worthy of imitation. Demetrius hath good report of all men; all who know him bear testimony to his amiable and pious conversation, and of the truth itself; every one, who would speak the truth, must acknowledge his excellence; and we, who are ministers of truth, declare our full approbation of him: and ye know that our record is true, and may be assuredly depended upon. Note, It is a noble character indeed so to behave as to be entitled to universal applause, and to be approved of God and all men of truth and integrity.

4. He concludes his epistle with the hopes of a personal interview shortly. I had many things to write, but I will not with ink and pen write unto thee: but I trust I shall shortly see thee, and we shall speak face to face, when I can more fully communicate all my mind. Peace be to thee; prosperity of every kind attend thee in body and soul. Our friends salute thee, joining in all Christian wishes. Greet the friends with thee by name, presenting to each my most affectionate remembrances.

A PRACTICAL COMMENT

UPON THE

OF

JUDE.

Introduction.

THIS epistle, written shortly before the destruction of Jerusalem, is styled general or catholic; for that it is not immediately directed to any particular person, family, or church, but to the whole society of Christians at that time, lately converted to the faith of Christ, whether from Judaism or Paganism. And it is, and will be of standing, lasting, and special use in and to the church as long as Christianity, that is, as time shall last.

Some of the chief things contained in it summarily are, 1. An account of the penman of it, a character of the church, the blessings and privileges of that happy society, ver. 1, 2. 2. The occasion of writing this epistle, ver. 3. 3. A character of evil and perverse men, who were already sprung up in that infant state of the church, and would be succeeded by others of the like evil spirit and temper, in after times, ver. 4. 4. A caution against hearkening to and following after such, from the severity of God towards the unbelieving, murmuring Israelites, at their coming out of Egypt, the angels that fell, the instance of Sodom and Gomorrha, their sin and punishment, ver. 5, 6, 7. 5. To these the apostle likens the seducers, against whom he was warning them, and describes them at large, from ver. 8—13. inclusive. 6. Then (as specially suitable to his argument) he cites an ancient prophecy of Enoch, foretelling and describing the future judgment, ver. 14, 15. 7. Enlargeth on the seducer's character, and guards against the offence which honest minds might be apt to take at the so early permission of such things, by showing that it was foretold, long before, that so it must be, ver. 16, 17, 18, 19. 8. Exhorts them to perseverance in the faith, fervency in prayer, watchfulness against falling from the love of God, and a lively hope of eternal life, ver. 20, 21. 9. Directs them how to carry themselves towards the erroneous and scandalous, ver. 22, 23. And, 10. Closes with an admirable doxology in the two last verses.

Verses 1—4. The epistle opens,

1. With an account of the sacred penman. Jude, the servant of Jesus Christ, whose highest honour it is to minister in the gospel, and brother of James, the son of Alpheus.

2. The persons to whom it is addressed. To them that are sanctified by God the Father, set apart for himself in the purpose of his eternal love, and preserved in Jesus Christ, as the glorious covenant head of his people, who loses none of those whom the Father hath given him, and called, in the fulness of time, to the actual participation of those gospel privileges which Jesus hath purchased, and God the Father promised to bestow on the redeemed, of pardon, grace, holiness, and comfort here, and of everlasting blessedness hereafter. Note, (1.) All those, who are called to partake of the grace of the gospel, are sanctified. Hope towards God, without holiness, is but delusion. (2.) Christ's people are preserved by him, and none can ever pluck them out of his hands.

3. The apostolical benediction. Mercy unto you, from a pardoning God, and peace, flowing from a sense of his reconciliation, and love, both to him and towards each other, be multiplied.

4. He exhorts them to hold fast the truth which they had received both in doctrine and practice. Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, which all believers enjoy through our adored Redeemer and Saviour; it was become needful for me to write unto you, because of the multitude of deceivers, and exhort you, that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints, firmly holding fast the unadulterated doctrines of truth, and zealously maintaining them against all heretical opposers. Note, (1.) The salvation of the gospel is a common salvation for Jews and Gentiles, and sinners of every kind, without exception. (2.) They who have received the truth, in the light and love of it, need to be exhorted still to stand fast against all the wiles of deceivers. (3.) That faith which God, by his inspired servants, once delivered to his saints, for the use of his church to the latest ages, we must contend for, not with anger, or carnal weapons, but with holy zeal, tempered with meekness, and arguments drawn from the sacred treasury of the scriptures.

5. He describes the false teachers against whom they need to be on their guard. For there are certain men crept in unawares, by craft and subtilty into the church and the ministry, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation, in God's wise and righteous counsels, ungodly men, whose spirit, temper, and conduct are directly opposite to the divine will and word, turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, perverting the richest doctrines of grace to the vilest purposes of impurity, and abusing them to encourage men in all immorality with the hopes of impunity; denying the only Lord God, in works, if not in words; practical, if not speculative atheists: and rejecting also the gospel testimony concerning the person, character, and offices of our Lord Jesus. Note, (1.) Deceivers have risen in every age; we need not wonder therefore if such ungodly men are found in our own, perverting the glorious grace of the gospel. (2.) They who are vile upon principle, and plead God's word to countenance their impurities are of all men most desperately wicked. (3.) When ungodly men meet their appointed condemnation, they receive but the just reward of their deeds.

5. I [m] will therefore put you in remembrance, though ye once knew this, how that the Lord, having saved the people out of the land of Egypt, afterward destroyed them that believed not. 6. And [n] the angels which kept not their * first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day. 7. [o] Even as Sodom and Gomorrha, and the cities about them, in like manner, giving themselves over to fornication, and going after [p] strange flesh, [q] are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire.

q 1 Cor. 10. 6, 11. 2 Pet. 2. 6. Mat. 11. 24.

Verses 5—7. The apostle, to enforce his warnings, reminds them of the judgment which God formerly executed on such ungodly men. I will therefore put you in remembrance, though ye once knew this, the perpetual memory of which needs to be preserved, and it is good to be often reminded of these things, that they may be present before our minds, and the impression of them more deep and lively.

Three awful instances of divine vengeance here stand forth to warn and deter others from the like crimes. Remember,

1. How that the Lord, having saved the people out of the land of Egypt, afterward destroyed them that believed not, though he had done so great things for them; and if he spared not these, let not the perverters of the gospel, whose crime is so much more aggravated, expect a less fearful doom. And remember also,

2. That the angels, though creatures of such superior excellence and dignity, who kept not their first estate, were not content with the station allotted them, but left their own habitation, affecting to be as the Most High, and were therefore hurled from those bright regions which were before their blessed abode; he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness, like criminals fast bound in prison, and kept in custody under his eternal and unchangeable decree, in spiritual darkness, misery, and black despair, unto the judgment of the great day, when sentence will be finally executed upon them, and their torment be complete as eternal. And if God thus punished rebel angels, what severity shall not they meet with who fight against the word of his truth, and the honour of his Son! Apostates in heaven or earth must perish together.

3. Another instance of God's wrath is produced. Even as Sodom and Gomorrha and the cities about them, Admah and Zeboim, in like manner abandoned to impurity, giving themselves over to fornication, and going after strange flesh, guilty of the most shocking acts of uncleanness, and the most unnatural crimes, are set forth for an example of God's tremendous wrath, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire; the liveliest image of what the damned must endure in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone for ever and ever. Wo to those who are partakers of their sins! the same fearful vengeance awaits them.

8. [r] Likewise also these filthy dreamers defile the flesh, despise dominion, and speak evil of dignities. 9. Yet [s] Michael the archangel, when contending with the devil, (he disputed about the [t] body of Moses,) [u] durst not bring against him a railing accusation, but said, The Lord rebuke thee. 10. [x] But these speak evil of those things which they know not: but what they know naturally, as brute

[c] These are spots in your feasts of charity, when they feast with you, feeding themselves without fear: [d] clouds they are without water, carried about of winds; trees whose fruit withereth, without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots; 13. Verses 8—13. The apostle describes these seducing teachers as guilty of the same crimes which had before brought down wrath both on sinning angels and ungodly men.

1. Their impurities were great. Likewise also these filthy dreamers defile the flesh; sleeping and waking their minds are ever running after impure objects; dishonouring their own bodies by their lewd practices, and drawing in others to gratify their lawless appetites.

2. They cast off all respect for lawful authority. They despise dominion, treating the civil government with insolence and contempt, and speak evil of dignities, reviling the persons of magistrates, and those who are high in office, whether in church or state. Yet even Michael the archangel, eminent as his rank and station is, when contending with the devil about the body of Moses, durst not bring a railing accusation against him, wicked as he was, but said, The Lord rebuke thee.

Some refer this to a contention which they suppose really passed on the mountain where Moses died, whose dead body, they conceive, the devil desired to possess, in order to lead Israel to idolatry, though nothing is mentioned of this in the Scriptures.

Others by Michael suppose, that Christ, the great angel of the covenant is meant; and by the body of Moses, understand the Mosaical economy, and refer to Zech. iii. 1, 2. but though the former sense hath its difficulties, the latter seems unnatural and strained. However, the argument is plain, that if the devil himself, wicked as he is, was not rebuked with railing, much less ought any magistrates or rulers which God hath ordained, in church or state, to be treated with insolence and malignity. But these seducers speak evil of those things which they know not, ignorant of the excellence and importance of religion and of the Scriptures, and of the usefulness of that ministry and magistracy against which they rail: but what they know naturally, as brute beasts, governed merely by their sensual appetites; in those things they corrupt themselves, giving a loose to all their brutish passions, without fear or shame, till they bring upon themselves swift destruction. Note, When men live like beasts, they may expect to perish like devils.

3. They copied the vilest examples. Woe unto them! the most fearful vengeance hangs over them: for they have gone in the way of Cain, filled with his malignant spirit of envy, hatred, and murder towards the righteous, and ran greedily after the error of Balaam for reward, ambitious, proud, covetous, and, like that wicked prophet, insatiate after gain, and they have perished in the gainsaying of Core, like those rebels who rose up against Moses and Aaron, and ready with them to be swallowed up in the yawning pit of hell. Note, Companions with sinners must expect to share their plagues.

4. He describes these deluders under a variety of images. These are spots in your feasts of charity, when they feast with you, feeding themselves with fear; whether in a way of civil intercourse, or religious communion, they let loose their luxurious appetites, without any fear of that judgment which awaits them; clouds they are without water, that seem to promise rain, but prove like noxious meteors, or noisome fogs carried about with winds, variable, and tossed to and fro by every blast of error: trees whose fruit withereth, deceiving our expectations, and bringing nothing to maturity; without fruit, their specious appearances like blasted fruit drop off, and the hypocrite and apostate is detected; twice dead, by nature, and by a revolt from their profession; plucked up by the roots, and thus irrecoverably ruined; all hope respecting them is become desperate, and they are now only fit fuel for the flames; raging waves of the sea, turbulent, ungovernable, foaming out their own shame, belching forth their blasphemies against Christ, and reproaches against his cause and people; wandering stars, resembling fiery meteors that kindle in the atmosphere, and after a momentary blaze, are extinguished; or, like the comets, wandering wide from the system of truth and holiness; to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever, in that place where total despair completes the misery of the damned, whose worm dieth not, and their fire is not quenched.

14. And [g] Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying, [h] Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, 15. [i] To execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them [k] of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their [l] hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him. 16. [m] These are murmurers, complainers, walking after their own lusts; [n] and their mouth speaketh great swelling words, [o] having men's persons in admiration because of advantage.

Verses 14—16. We have here,

1. A prophecy of Enoch's recorded concerning these men. And Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, in the line of descent, prophesied of these, saying, Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, in glorious majesty, swift to avenge the wrongs of his people, and the blasphemies against himself; to execute judgment upon all, who must stand at his bar, and receive from his lips their decisive sentence; and to convince all that are ungodly among them, by the vengeance he will inflict, of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, in defiance of his authority; and of all their hard speeches, which ungodly sinners have spoken against him. Note, (1.) There is a dreadful day of judgment at hand, when vengeance shall overtake the ungodly. (2.) However impious and stout-hearted sinners may now be, every impenitent heart in that day will tremble, and every hardened face gather blackness. (3.) Though mockers now make light of ridiculing the word, the ways, and the people of God, they will find a fearful reckoning for their hard speeches in the day of recompense.

2. A farther description of these wicked men. These are murmurers, against God and his providences; complainers, discontented with their condition in life: finding fault with the doctrines and dispensations of the Lord; walking after their own lusts, gratifying every vile and sensual appetite without restraint: and their mouths speaketh great swelling words, making an ostentatious display of their knowledge and piety, when in the very depth of error, and in the gall of bitterness; having men's persons in admiration because of advantage; caressing and flattering those, however vile, who are rich, in order to make gain of them. Note, (1.) Discontent with our lot is, in God's sight, rebellion against his providence. (2.) Men-pleasers, and smooth-tongued flatterers of the great, have the sure brand upon them of ministers of Satan.

17. But, beloved, [p] remember ye the words which were spoken before of the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ; 18. How that they told you [q] there should be mockers in the last time, who should walk after their own ungodly lusts. 19. [r] These be they who separate themselves, [s] sensual, having not the Spirit. 20. But ye, beloved, [t] building up yourselves on your most holy faith, [u] praying in the Holy Ghost, 21. [x] Keep yourselves in the love of God, [y] looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life. 22. [z] And of some have compassion, making a difference: 23. [a] And others save with fear, pulling them out of the fire; [b] hating even the garment spotted by the flesh. 24. Now unto him [c] that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy, 25. [d] To the only wise God our Saviour, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever. Amen.

Verses 17—25. The apostle concludes,

1. With his kind admonitions. But beloved, be deaf to the arts of these seducers, and remember ye the words which were spoken before of the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ, which now have received their fulfilment, and should confirm the doctrines which they taught: how that they told you there should be mockers in the last time, who should walk after their own ungodly lusts; scoffing at the religion of Jesus, that without restraint they may give a loose to every lawless passion. And these be they, of whom the apostles spake, who separate themselves; fomenting factions, and, under pretences of purer worship, forming new sects and parties, withdrawing from the communion of the apostolic church; when, notwithstanding all their professions of piety, they are utterly sensual, the slaves of worldly-mindedness and fleshly lusts, having not the Spirit, and strangers to his grace and influence. Note, (1.) The only way to be preserved from the wiles of deceivers, is to cleave to our Bibles. (2.) We need not think it strange that so many divisions rend the church, and so many factious spirits endeavour to draw away disciples after them; how else should the scripture be fulfilled? (3.) We must not be ashamed of mocking; remember who will mock last. See Prov. i. 26.

2. With warm exhortations. But ye, beloved, building up yourselves on your most holy faith, on the glorious foundation of it, Jesus Christ, continuing steadfast in your holy profession, and seeking to establish each other in the truth; praying in the Holy Ghost, under his gracious teaching and influences, who helpeth our infirmities; keep yourselves in the love of God; use all appointed means to preserve and increase the heavenly fire, and to approve yourselves in all holy obedience and humble resignation; looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus unto eternal life, and that complete felicity, both in body and soul, for which you must own yourselves wholly indebted to the riches of his sovereign grace. And of some have compassion, making a difference between those who err wilfully, and those who are misled through weakness and the wiles of deceivers, whom with all kindness and tenderness labour to recover from the snare; and others save with fear; using that sharpness, severity, and terror with them, which their more dangerous state requires; pulling them, if possible, out of the fire, which is ready to consume them; hating even the garment spotted by the flesh; detesting all impure conversation, and testifying an unremitting displeasure against sin, and whatever would lead thereto; as the Jews were under the law obliged to shun every touch that communicated defilement, and the garment that had the spot of leprosy must be burned. Note, (1.) Faith in lively exercise is the great preservative from all delusion. (2.) Prayer must be our daily employment; spiritual prayer, not the task of the lip and the knee, but the warm effusions of the heart, where the Holy Ghost abdies. (3.) They who would keep themselves in the love of God, must carefully shun whatever they know must offend him. (4.) Mercy, not merit, must be our hope, even in a judgment-day: and eternal life be expected merely as the sovereign gift of God in Jesus Christ. (5.) We should show a holy jealousy over our brethren, tenderly desirous to snatch them from the dangers to which they are exposed; kindly warning them; and where sharpness is needful, faithfully declaring those terrors of the Lord, which may rouse the lethargic conscience.

3. He closes with a solemn doxology. Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling, that blessed Jesus, in and by whom alone you can be preserved (see ver. 1.) from all evil or apostasy; and to present you faultless, in his own divine righteousness, before the presence of his glory, in the great day of his appearing, with exceeding joy, when every tear shall be wiped from your eyes, and eternal triumphs fill your happy souls; to the only wise God our Saviour, in whom dwell all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever. Amen. Note, (1.) We are in his hands who is not only able, but hath engaged to keep us from falling; therefore we may trust, and not be afraid. (2.) Whatever infirmities still cleave to us, we shall be presented faultless before the throne, for if we are Christ's, we are complete in him. (3.) The service of eternity will begin even here below, and every redeemed soul will delight to proclaim the Saviour's praise.

A PRACTICAL COMMENT

UPON THE

ST JOHN THE DIVINE.

Introduction.

WE are now entering upon the last volume in the canon of the scriptures, and the most difficult of the whole to be understood; as must needs be the case with prophecies which wait for the key of time to open them.

It is generally admitted, that this book contains an account of the state of the church to the end of time; then at least we shall fully understand its contents. Meantime, whilst we are humbly searching what and what manner of time the Spirit speaking in it doth signify, we shall find much profitable matter for our soul's health; and though we may mistake in the application of some of the prophecies, yet shall we obtain the blessing promised to those who read and hear the things written in this book, chap. i. ver. 3.

I concur with those who suppose, that the events from chap. iv. to the end follow in a regular series; and am content to select from the labours of the most wise and judicious interpreters, the sense which appears most probable; though withal acknowledging, that in many places the prophecies are covered with deep obscurity, and the wisest conjectures dubious. We must be content for a while to wait the explication of them. The vision is for an appointed time, and in the end it shall speak.

CHAP. I.—ANNO DOMINI, 96.

This chapter is a general preface to the whole book, and contains, 1. An inscription, declaring the original and the design of it, ver. 1, 2. 2. The apostolic benediction pronounced on all those that shall pay a due regard to the contents of this book, ver. 3—8. 3. A glorious vision or appearance of the Lord Jesus Christ to the apostle John, when he delivered to him this revelation from ver. 9. to the end of the chapter.

[e] Who bare record of the word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he saw. 3. [f] Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein; [g] for the time is at hand.

Verses 1—3. The book opens,

1. With a preface declaring its sacred contents. The revelation of Jesus Christ, which comes from him, as the great prophet of his church, and which God gave unto him, to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; some of them to be quickly accomplished, and the rest in order till the end of time; and he sent and signified it by his angel, whom he employed on this errand, unto his servant John, who bare record of the word of God, and had before, in his gospel and epistles, spoken of the glory and offices of the incarnate Word, and was one of the faithful witnesses of the testimony of Jesus Christ, of his gospel, and of all things that he saw; the miracles, life, death, and resurrection of the great Redeemer, and those amazing visions which are here recorded.

2. A blessing is pronounced on the hearers, readers, and observers of this book. Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, attentively remarking the prophecies here revealed, and inquiring into the mind of the Spirit; and keep those things which are written therein; retaining them in their memory, and directed by them in their practice; for the time is at hand, when their fulfilment will begin. Note, (1.) They who diligently study the scriptures, will find the happy fruit of their labours. (2.) The shorter the period of time allotted to us is, the greater diligence should we give to improve it.

4. JOHN to the [h] seven churches which are in Asia: [i] Grace be unto you, and peace, from him [k] which is, and which was, and which is to come; and from [l] the seven spirits which are before his throne; 5. And from Jesus Christ, who is [m] the faithful witness, and the [n] first-begotten of the dead, and [o] the Prince of the kings of the earth. Unto him that [p] loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, 6. And [q] hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; [r] to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen. 7. [s] Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and [t] they also which pierced him: [u] and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so, Amen. 8. [x] I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, [y] the Almighty.

Verses 4—8. The apostle,

1. Addresses the seven churches which are in Asia: and adds his benediction, Grace be unto you in all its fulness of blessings, and peace in your consciences from a sense of redeeming love, flowing from him which is, and which was, and which is to come, from the eternal Father, in his nature and perfections unchangeably the same for ever and ever: and from the seven spirits which are before his throne, even that Holy Ghost whose gifts and graces are various and perfect, having all fulness to communicate to these seven churches, and to all the members of them; and from Jesus Christ, through whom as Mediator all the blessings of the triune God descend upon his people; who is the faithful witness, the anointed prophet to declare the Father's will; and the first-begotten of the dead, who rose as our glorious high-priest, with his own blood to appear in the presence of God for us; and the Prince of the kings of the earth, exalted to the mediatorial throne, and become the Head of all principalities and powers, as the universal King to protect his people and subdue their enemies.

2. He ascribes glory to the incarnate Jesus. Unto him that loved us with an everlasting love, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, which he shed to redeem us from all iniquity: and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father, investing us with dominion over all the power of evil, and consecrating us for his blessed service, to offer those spiritual sacrifices which are acceptable to God by Jesus Christ; to him, even to this amiable and adorable Jesus, be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen! Note, (1.) Jesus by his blood hath purged our sins; and nothing but this could ever have cleansed our guilty souls. (2.) Every child of God is now consecrated to the highest office and dignity; is heir to a throne of glory, and hath access with boldness into the holiest of all through atoning blood. (3.) They who know the divine Redeemer, and are interested in his love, will be ceaseless in their adorations of him.

3. With rapture the apostle looks forward to the glorious coming of Jesus as the eternal judge, and considering him as present for the comfort and joy of his people, cries out with wonder and delight, Behold, he cometh with clouds; in awful majesty, surrounded with angels and archangels, ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands; and every eye shall see him, seated on the throne of judgment; and they also who pierced him, with impious and bloody cruelty nailed him to the tree; and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him, whose guilt unpardoned now shall stare them in the face, and horrors unutterable seize upon their consciences; whilst with transport the faithful shall welcome his arrival, approving and applauding all his righteous decisions; and are now wishing for the day of his appearing: even so, Amen! come quickly. Note, (1.) A day of judgment will spread terror through a wicked world. Wo then to those who have pierced the Redeemer, whether in his own person, or in the insults shown to his people; they shall receive a fearful recompense. (2.) Blessed and happy are they who, in the prospect of this day, can comfortably say, Even so, Amen!

4. The great Judge describes his own transcendent honour. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, the sum and substance of the scriptures, possessing all perfections, and accomplishing all my pleasure; which is, which was, and which is to come, the Almighty, the self-existent and incomprehensible Jehovah, able to save or destroy to the uttermost.

9. I John, who also am [z] your brother, and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the isle that is called Patmos, for [a] the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ. 10. I was [a] in the Spirit on [b] the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet, 11. Saying, [c] I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last: and, What thou seest, write in a book, and send it unto [d] the seven churches which are in Asia: unto Ephesus, and unto Smyrna, and unto Pergamos, and unto Thyatira, and unto Sardis, and unto Philadelphia, and unto Laodicea. 12. And [e] I turned to see the voice that spake with me: and, being turned, I saw [f] seven golden candlesticks; 13. And [g] in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto [h] the Son of man, clothed with [i] a garment down to the foot, and [k] girt about the paps with a golden girdle. 14. [l] His head and his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow; and his eyes were [m] as a flame of fire; 15. And [n] his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and [o] his voice as the sound of many waters. 16. [p] And he had in his right hand seven stars: [q] and out of Verses 9—20. We have here the glorious vision which appeared to the divine penman of this book.

1. He calls himself John, your brother and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ; for all his servants follow him with their cross to glory, and must expect and be content patiently to suffer for his great name's sake. He was now in banishment in the isle of Patmos, for his fidelity to his blessed Master; and, though removed far from earthly comforters, still he found that presence of God which made his lonely abode a paradise of delights. He was in the Spirit on the Lord's day; whilst on that holy day, observed by the Christian church in memory of the Saviour's resurrection, he was employed in sacred meditation and prayer, he felt the descending power of the Holy One, and was filled with prophetic inspiration. Note, They who on the Lord's day employ in spiritual exercises their time and thoughts, retiring from the world and all its cares and avocations, will find a blessed intercourse with heaven, and experience that communion with God which is a foretaste of eternal blessedness.

2. He declares what he heard and saw. A great voice, as of a trumpet behind him; awakened his attention, and he heard distinctly the voice of Jesus, saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last; and commanding him to write what in vision he was now about to see and hear, and send it to the seven churches of Asia, whose names are specified. Turning to see from whence the voice proceeded, a glorious personage meets his astonished sight, whose majesty he describes. I saw seven golden candlesticks, seven branches springing from the same stem, like that which stood in the tabernacle of old, the emblems of that light of truth and fire of love which Jesus sends into the midst of his church and people, and which they in their conversation hold forth to the world. And in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks, one stood, as the priest when he came to trim the lamps, like unto the Son of man clothed with a garment down to the foot, the figure of his complete and spotless righteousness: and girt about the paps with a golden girdle, far surpassing the costly girdle of the ephod, and intimating how ready and able he is to discharge his sacerdotal office on their behalf: his head and his hairs were white like wool, as the Ancient of days, as white as snow; and his eyes were as a flame of fire, piercing and penetrating into the inmost secrets of men's souls, and darting lightning against his foes; and his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace, mighty to support the concerns of his church and people, and to tread down their enemies; and his voice as the sound of many waters, spreading to the distant corners of the earth his blessed gospel word, and terrible in his providences and judgments as the roaring waves. And he had in his right hand seven stars, the faithful bishops of his church, whom he upholds and preserves, and who shine bright in the lustre of his grace; and out of his mouth went a sharp two-edged sword, even the sword of his law and gospel, pricking sinners to the heart, and hewing down all opposition: and his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength, reviving as the light and warmth of his invigorating beams. And when I saw him I fell at his feet as dead, overcome with the brightness of his glory. And he laid his right hand upon me, to revive my intimidated mind by his mighty grace, saying unto me, Fear not; I am the first and the last, in kindness and love unchangeable. I am he that liveth, essentially possessed of life in and of myself; and was dead, in that human nature which I assumed; and behold I am alive for evermore, Amen! so it is infallibly certain and true; and I have the keys of hell and of death, to save or to destroy according to my sovereign pleasure; to unlock the gates of the grave to my people, and shut up in the prison of eternal darkness the wicked. Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter until the end of time. The mystery of the seven stars which thou sawest in my right hand, and the seven golden candlesticks. The seven stars are the angels, or messengers, of the seven churches: and the seven candlesticks, which thou sawest, are the seven churches. May we by faith behold the same Jesus, and feel the enlivening influence of his presence with our souls!

CHAP. II.—ANNO DOMINI, 96.

The apostle John, according to the command which he received, proceeds to write the epistles to the angels or ministers of the seven churches; of Ephesus, from ver. 1—8. 2. Of Smyrna, from ver. 8—12. 3. Of Pergamos, from ver. 12—18. 4. Of Thyatira, from ver. 18, to the end.

1. UNTO the [a] angel of the church of [b] Ephesus write; These things saith [c] he that holdeth the seven stars in his right hand, [d] who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks; 2. [e] I know thy [f] works, and thy labour, and thy [g] patience, and [h] how thou canst not bear them which are evil: and thou hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars; 3. [f] And hast borne, and hast patience, and for my name's sake hast laboured, and hast not fainted. 4. Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because [k] thou hast left thy first love. 5. [l] Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and [m] will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent. 6. But this thou hast, that [n] thou hatest the deeds of the Nicolaitanes, which I also hate.

Verses 1—7. The first epistle is directed to the angel of the church of Ephesus. We have,

1. The preface, informing us who dictated what the apostle wrote, even that glorious Personage that holdeth the seven stars in his right hand, and who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks. Note, The Lord Jesus is he who makes his ministers bright stars: he gives them purity of doctrine and holiness of life, and enables them to shine to his own glory. May we each be upheld in his almighty arms, and be fed with oil from the living Source, shining brighter and stronger till we come to the eternal temple above!

2. The contents,

(1.) The epistle contains matter of great commendation. I know and approve thy works as a minister of zeal, and the works of the church in general as exemplary; and thy patience under persecutions; and how thou canst not bear them who are evil, abhorring their principles and practices, and removing them from communion with you: and thou hast tried them who say they are apostles, and are not; and hast found them liars, detecting their impostures and demonstrating the falsehood of their pretended commission from Christ; and hast borne many conflicts, and hast patience, and for my name's sake hast laboured with fidelity and hast not fainted. Note, They who are put in trust with the ministry may expect many trials. They have need of peculiar faith and patience, that they may persevere in their labours, and faint not.

(2.) Here is a needful rebuke and admonition. Nevertheless, I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love, and grown colder of late in affection to me and my ways. And such a backsliding in heart the Lord Jesus observes, and cannot but be highly displeased with. Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent. Note, (1.) They who are fallen should remember how much they have lost, and with grief and shame consider their ways. (2.) They who truly repent will return to their first works, and then they will return again to a sense of divine grace and love. (3.) The churches that neglect Christ's admonitions may expect to be visited with his judgments.

(3.) A word of encouragement is added. But this thou hast, that thou hatest the deeds of the Nicolaitanes, which I also hate; their idolatrous, vicious, and impure principles and practices. Note, True Christians will maintain a holy hatred to all the ways of sin.

3. The conclusion. Where we have, (1.) A solemn call to attention. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches. Note, The scriptures are of general use for all ages; and what was written of old was written for our instruction, as much as for those to whom it was more immediately addressed. (2.) A gracious promise. To him that overcometh, and perseveres unto the end, manfully fighting under my banners against sin, Satan, and the world, will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God; admitting him to all the blessings and happiness of the celestial paradise, infinitely surpassing that from which Adam, for his transgression was ejected. Note, In Christ Jesus, and by his grace, we shall be advanced to higher glories than ever man in innocence enjoyed.

Verses 8—11. The form of the epistle is similar. We have,

1. The preface to the church of Smyrna. These things saith the first and the last, the Creator and Judge of all, the Author and Finisher of his people's salvation; who was dead and is alive, delivered for our offences, to make the one great atonement, is raised again for our justification, and lives for ever to secure our eternal blessedness.

2. The contents. (1.) Their commendation. I know thy works and tribulation, how zealously thou hast laboured, and how much thou hast suffered; and thy poverty, (but thou art rich) for whatever we lose for Christ and the gospel's sake, it shall procure us much more substantial treasures in a better world. And I know the blasphemy of them who say they are Jews, and are not, but are the synagogue of Satan, who, whilst they pretend a peculiar covenant-title to God's favour, and zealously urge the Mosaical ritual as essential to salvation, were in fact Satan's emissaries, and the bitter enemies of the spiritual Israel. (2.) Warning is given them of approaching trials. Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer, so as to be terrified from the path of duty: behold, the devil, by cruel persecutors, his instruments, shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried, and your faith and constancy proved in the furnace of affliction, and ye shall have tribulation ten days, either so many years, or for a considerable though indefinite space of time. Note, God's people need not fear the malice of their most envenomed persecutors. If he be for them, no matter who may be against them. (3.) An encouraging promise is added. Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life; and then, though it be won by martyrdom, our gain will be unspeakably great.

3. The conclusion. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; what encouragements there are to fidelity, and how watchful God is over his chosen. He that overcometh in the holy warfare; and is fully victorious over his spiritual foes, shall not be hurt of the second death, hath nothing to fear, hath every thing to hope for in eternity.

12. And to the angel of the church in Pergamos write; These things saith he which hath a the sharp sword with two edges; 13. b I know thy works, and where thou dwellest, even where Satan's seat is: and c thou holdest fast my name, and hast not denied my faith, d even in those days wherein Antipas was my faithful martyr, who was slain among you,

Verses 12—17. Here is, as before,

1. The preface, to the angel of the church of Pergamos. These things saith he who hath the sharp sword with two edges; the sword of his word and his providence, to defend the faithful, and to cut off all enemies and apostates.

2. The contents. (1.) Notice is taken of their perilous situation. I know thy works, and behold with satisfaction whatever is excellent among you; and where thou dwellest, even where Satan's seat is, environed with enemies; and thou holdest fast my name, and hast not denied my faith amidst the fire of hottest persecution, even in those days wherein Antipas was my faithful martyr, who was slain among you where Satan dwelleth, and manifests his bloody rage against my loyal subjects. Note, Steady fidelity in perilous days is doubly commendable. (2.) A reproof is given them for what was amiss. But I have a few things against thee, because thou hast there them that hold the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balac to cast a stumblingblock before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed unto idols, and to commit fornication. Some such seducing teachers were among them who inculcated the lawfulness of eating idol-sacrifices, and of fornication. So hast thou also them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitanes, which thing I hate; and countenance their impure and abominable practices. Note, God hates all impurity: and they who make light of fornication will feel the heavy wrath of an offended God, which it provokes. (3.) They are warned instantly to repent. Repent; or else I will come unto thee quickly in judgment, and will fight against them with the sword of my mouth: and no sword is so fatal to the body as the denunciations of his wrath are to the guilty soul. Note, By speedy repentance alone we can prevent the threatened judgments. And not only must we cleanse our heart from the love of sin, but separate ourselves from all communion with scandalous offenders, lest we become by connivance partakers of their guilt and ruin.

3. The conclusion. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches: To him that overcometh, faithful in the arduous conflict, will I give to eat of the hidden manna, feeding him with the abundant grace and consolations of my Spirit and my gospel: and will give him a white stone, absolving him from all his iniquities; and in the stone a new name written, the name of a child of God, and heir of glory, securing to him an eternity of inconceivable blessedness, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it.

18. [o] And unto the angel of the church in Thyatira write; These things saith [p] the Son of God, who hath his eyes like unto a flame of fire, and his feet are like fine brass; 19. [q] I know thy works, and charity, and service, and faith, and thy patience, and thy works; [r] and the last to be more than the first. 20. [s] Notwithstanding, I have a few things against thee, because thou sufferest that woman Jezebel, which calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and to seduce my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols. 21. And I gave her space [t] to repent of her fornication; and she repented not. 22. [u] Behold, I will cast her into a bed, and them that commit adultery with her into great tribulation, except they repent of their deeds. 23. And [x] I will kill her children with death; and all the churches shall know that [y] I am he which searcheth the reins and hearts: [z] and I will give unto every one of you according to your works. 24. But unto you I say, and unto the rest in Thyatira, as many as have not this doctrine, and which have not known [a] the depths of Satan, as they speak; I will put upon you none other burden; 25. [b] But that which ye have already hold fast till I come. 26. [c] And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, [d] to him will I give power over the nations: 27. And he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers; even as I received of my Father. 28. And I will give him [e] the morning star. 29. [f] He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

Verses 18—29. The fourth epistle is directed to the angel of the church of Thyatira.

1. The preface describes the Son of God, who dictates to the sacred penman. These things saith the Son of God, who hath his eyes like unto a flame of fire, infinite in wisdom and knowledge, discerning the secrets of all hearts; and his feet are like fine brass, almighty to support his people amidst every danger, and to tread his enemies and theirs into the dust.

2. The contents. 1. They are highly commended. I know thy works, and am pleased with them; and thy charity, and service, and faith, and thy patience, and thy good works; and the last to be more than the first; that in all divine graces and good conversation thou art increasing with the increase of God, growing more exemplary and eminent. Note, It is well for us when he who knoweth our hearts bears witness that our last works are more than the first. 2. They are reproved for what was blameable among them. Notwithstanding, I have a few things against thee, because thou sufferest that woman Jezebel, who calleth herself a prophetess, (probably some woman of eminence among them who pretended to inspiration, and had her abettors and followers) to teach and seduce my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols, perverting their souls, and leading them to corporal and spiritual idolatries and impurities. And I gave her space to repent of her fornication, and she repented not; therefore behold swift vengeance will overtake her and her adherents: I will cast her into a bed of languishing and misery, and them that commit adultery with her into great tribulation, the partakers of her sins shall partake of her plagues, except they repent of their deeds, and prevent the threatened judgments: and I will kill her children with death, as surely as the sons of Ahab perished by the sword of Jehu: and all the churches shall know that I am he that searcheth the reins and hearts, and can discover every hidden principle and secret of the soul, distinguishing the hypocrite from the faithful; and I will give unto every one of you according to your works. Note, (1.) They who abuse the patience of God, and harden themselves in sin, instead of repenting of their iniquities, will bring aggravated guilt and ruin upon their souls. (2.) God's omniscience cannot be deceived, nor his justice eluded; the unfaithful professor will be detected and sentenced at his impartial tribunal. 3. He encourages the faithful among them. But unto you I say, and unto the rest in Thyatira, As many as have not this doctrine, and who have not known the depths of Satan, abhorring all such impure principles and practices, which impostors, influenced by deep Satanical subtlety, seek to inculcate, I will put upon you none other burden, nor add any farther injunctions or restraints than those revealed in my word. But that which ye have already, the doctrines and precepts of the gospel which you have embraced, hold fast till I come to take you to my eternal rest, and deliver you from all your temptations for ever. Note, (1.) The Lord knows how to separate between the precious and the vile, and will secure his own people amidst all the arts of deceivers. (2.) They who would meet Christ with comfort at his coming, must hold fast his truth in principle and practice, and never be moved away from the hope of the gospel.

The conclusion. And he that overcometh and keepeth my works unto the end, patiently and faithfully persevering in the profession and practice of the gospel, to him will I give power over the nations, when he shall sit with me on my throne at the great day; (and he shall rule them with a rod of iron, breaking in pieces all the wicked of the earth, as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers) even as I received, in my office-capacity, a kingdom of my Father: he shall share my glory, and reign with me for ever; and I will give him the morning-star, so that he shall shine bright in eternal glory as the stars for ever and ever. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches. Lord, open thou mine ears, and make me earnestly take heed to the things that are spoken!

CHAP. III.—ANNO DOMINI, 96.

Here we have three more of the epistles of Christ to the churches:
1. To Sardis, ver. 1—7. 2 To Philadelphia, ver. 7—14.
3. To Laodicea, ver. 14—22.

1. AND [a] unto the angel of the church in Sardis write: These things saith he that [b] hath the seven spirits of God, and the seven stars: [c] I know thy works, that thou hast [d] a name that thou livest, and art dead. 2. [e] Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die: for [f] I have not found thy works perfect before God. 3. [h] Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast, and repent. [i] If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee. 4. Thou hast [k] a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me [l] in white: for they are worthy. 5. [m] He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the [n] book of life, but [o] I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels. 6. [p] He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

Verses 1—6. To the angel of the church of Sardis is this epistle directed.

1. It comes from him that hath the seven spirits of God, who, as the divine Mediator, hath all variety and fulness of the gifts and graces of the Spirit to bestow; and the seven stars, guiding and directing his ministering servants, and giving them all their light and influence.

2. The contents are melancholy. 1. I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead; amidst all thy specious appearances of religion, I know that thy professions in general are hypocritical, and many who have a name among the members of the church are really dead in trespasses and sins, and others too cold and lukewarm. Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die, before all vital godliness be utterly departed: for I have not found thy works perfect before God; they are but as the carcass, when the spirit is fled: thy duties lifeless; thy services insincere. Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast, and repent. Note, (1.) A form of godliness will avail nothing, if the power of it be lost. (2.) They who feel their souls under decays, need jealously watch, and cry to God for quickening influences to revive his work in their hearts. (3.) The way to recover from our backslidings is to consider how we departed; what God's word hath said of the sin and danger of such a conduct; to repent of our unfaithfulness; and still to cleave to those promises that preserve the soul from despair, and encourage us to return to God. 2. He sharply threatens them: If therefore thou shalt not watch, but guest on careless and secure, I will come upon thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee. Note, Christ's appearing at death or judgment will be very terrible and surprising to the backslider in heart; when too late he will be startled from the slumbers of security. 3. He encourages the few faithful among them: Thou hast a few names even in Sardis, cold and careless as the generality of professors are, who have not defiled their garments; who have kept themselves unspotted from the world, and maintained a becoming purity of doctrine and manners amidst abounding ungodliness; and they shall walk with me in white as sacred priests, and triumphant conquerors, decked with glory, honour, and immortality; for they are worthy, and meet for my inheritance among the saints in light.

3. The conclusion. He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; shining in splendid robes of righteousness and victory: and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels, in the great day of my appearing to judge the world. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches. Note, They who fight manfully under Christ's banner, will be acknowledged by him with the most distinguished favour and honour, when he shall come to reward their fidelity.

7. [q] And to the angel of the church in Philadelphia write; These things saith [r] he that is holy, he that is true, he that hath [s] the key of David, he that openeth, and no man shutteth: and shutteth, and no man openeth; 8. [t] I know thy works: behold I have set before thee [u] an open door, and no man can shut it: for thou [x] hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name. 9. Behold, I will make [y] them of the synagogue of Satan, which say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie: behold, [z] I will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee. 10. [a] Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth. 11. [b] Behold, I come quickly: hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown. 12. [c] Him that overcometh will I make [d] a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and [e] I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is new Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God: and I will write upon him my new name. 13. [f] He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

Verses 7—13. The sixth epistle is directed to the angel of the church of Philadelphia. We have,

1. The preface. These things saith he that is holy, he that is true, who by nature is essential truth and holiness, the substance of all the prophecies and promises, the true Messiah; he that hath the key of David, on whose shoulder the government rests; he that openeth the gates of the grave and the kingdom of heaven to his people, and no man shutteth; no creature can exclude those from his eternal glory whom he hath chosen for himself; and shutteth up the wicked in the dreadful prison of eternal torment, and no man openeth, or can open the gates of the impassable gulf, to release the damned from thence.

2. The contents. [1.] I know thy works, and regard them with delight and approbation: behold, I have set before thee an open door, that my word should run, and have free access, and be glorified; and no man can shut it, or obstruct the progress of the gospel: for thou hast a little strength, and a measure, though it be small, of true grace and spiritual attainments; and hast kept my word, with fidelity and steadfastness, and hast not denied my name, nor revolted from the profession of the faith amidst the wiles of deceivers, and the persecutions of avowed enemies. Behold, I will make them of the synagogue of Satan, (which say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie;) behold, with thankfulness and delight, I will make them, who, under pretence of zeal for Judaism, corrupt the doctrines of Christianity, and whose practice is vicious as their principles are erroneous, to come and worship before thy feet; abased to the dust, and brought with humble confession of their faults to take shame to themselves; and to know that I have loved thee, with distinguishing favour and regard. Note, Sooner or later the bitterest persecutors of God's people shall be made to know how dear they are to him, and be covered with everlasting confusion in the view of their malice against them. [2.] A gracious promise is given to the faithful. Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, and maintained the profession of the unadulterated gospel, amidst the malignant opposition of envenomed foes: I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, that thou shalt not apostatize from the truth under those fiery persecutions, which shall, under the bloody heathen emperors of Rome, come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth, and show who are true and false professors. Note, (1.) They who steadily cleave to Christ, shall be kept in the most dangerous days. (2.) We must prepare for temptation; it will come, and if we are unprepared, we shall be in imminent danger. [3.] He adds a glorious encouragement. Behold, I come quickly: the time therefore of suffering cannot but be momentary: hold that fast which thou hast, with holy resolution cleaving to the word of truth, that no man take thy crown; nor by fraud or violence seduce or intimidate thee from the faith of the gospel, and rob thee of the reward of fidelity. Note, A sense of the speedy coming of Jesus for our help, is the great support under every affliction.

3. The conclusion. He that overcometh, will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out; admitted into the eternal presence of God in glory, and there shall be ever with the Lord, enjoying that beatific vision. And I will write upon him the name of my God, as one of the redeemed from the earth; and the name of the city of my God, which is the new Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God; as a citizen, entitled to all the blessings and privileges of that celestial city: and I will write upon him my new name, acknowledging him for a Christian indeed, and bringing him to share in all the glories of my kingdom. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; and well worthy it is of our deepest and most serious attention.

14. [g] And unto the angel of the church of * the Laodiceans write; These things saith [h] the Amen, the faithful and true Witness, [i] the beginning of the creation of God; 15. [k] I know thy works, that [l] thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot. 16. [m] So then, because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth. 17. Because thou sayest, [n] I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art [o] wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked: 18. I counsel thee to [p] buy of me [q] gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and [r] white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy na-

Verses 14—22. The last epistle is directed to the angel of the church of Laodicea. We have,

1. The preface. These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true witness, whose testimony is infallible, and neither can nor will deceive his people, or fail of the accomplishment of his prophecies; the beginning of the creation of God; the author of life and being to every creature; the head of vital influence to his people, having in all things the pre-eminence, and possessing universal dominion in heaven and earth.

2. The contents. [1.] A melancholy account is given of their state. I know thy works that thou art neither cold nor hot, but lifeless and lukewarm: I would thou wert cold or hot; either be sincerely zealous or make no profession, rather than disgrace it by an unsuitable conduct. [2.] A threatening is added. So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth, as loathsome and nauseous. [3.] The cause of their declension is remarked. Because thou sayest, I am rich and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; filled with spiritual gifts, abounding in worldly wealth; and thus they flattered themselves with high imaginations of their own excellence: and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked; insensible to thy spiritual wants and poverty; ignorant of all true wisdom; destitute of real grace and righteousness, and exposed to the storms of divine wrath. Note, (1.) Nothing is more fatal to the soul, than a vain conceit of our own excellencies. (2.) Many flatter themselves as confident of heaven, whose ways lead down to death and hell. [4.] He gives them the kindest advice. I counsel thee to buy of me, that is, to come to me out of my fulness to receive freely the supply of every want, gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; the gold of my Spirit, wisdom, and grace, and all the spiritual treasures which I bestow on my redeemed; and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed; even that spotless and everlasting righteousness which I have wrought out, and will put upon thee, that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; but that all thy guilt and deformity may be for ever hid from the eyes of divine purity and justice; and anoint thine eyes with eye-salve, that thou mayest see the things that make for thy everlasting peace, and all the mysteries of gospel grace, no longer blinded by ignorance, prejudice, and worldly lusts. Note, They who would be spiritually rich, and clothed, and wise unto salvation, must come to Christ out of his fulness to buy; and, blessed be his name, the purchase is to be made without money and without price, for he freely gives to the miserable and the destitute. [5.] A gracious encouragement is yet given them to repent. As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten, the reproofs of my word, and the corrections of my providence, are the rod of love: be zealous therefore; cast off this lukewarm spirit; let the fire of zeal and love kindle in your hearts; and repent of past unfaithfulness. Behold, such is my patience and condescensions, I yet stand waiting to be gracious, at the door of your hearts: if any man hear my voice, attend to my call and warnings, and open the door, in faith and penitence to receive me with eager welcome into his soul, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me, honouring him with my presence, and love, and blessed communion. Note, (1.) The Lord's chastisements are signs, not of his wrath, but of his love. (2.) Christ, by his providences, word, and Spirit, knocks at the door of our hearts; and they who welcome him in, shall find him not only as a guest that tarrieth for a night, but whose communion shall make us blessed for eternity.

3. The conclusion. To him that overcometh the corruptions of his nature, and the temptations of the world, will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am sat down with my Father in his throne; to such infinite and transcendent glory and dignity shall he be exalted in the great day of my appearing, and come to reign with me triumphant over every foe for ever and ever. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; for these things are written for our learning to the latest ages: and blessed are they who attend to the warnings, reproofs, exhortations, encouragements, and instructions here revealed, and feel their mighty influence.

CHAP. IV.—ANNO DOMINI, 96.

In this chapter the prophetical scene begins; and as the epistolary part opened with a vision of Christ, chap. i. so this part is introduced with a glorious appearance of the great God, whose throne is in heaven, compassed about with the heavenly host. John, 1. Records the heavenly sight he saw, from ver. 1—8. And then, 2. The heavenly songs he heard, from ver. 8. to the end.

1. AFTER [a] this I looked, and behold, [b] a door was opened in heaven; and the [c] first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which said, Come up hither, and I will shew thee things which must be hereafter. 2. And immediately [d] I was in the Spirit: and, behold, [e] a throne was set in heaven, and one sat on the throne. 3. [f] And he that sat was to look upon like a jasper and a sardine stone: and there was [g] a rainbow round about the throne, in sight like unto an emerald. 4. And round about the throne were four and twenty seats: and upon the seats I saw [h] four and twenty elders [i] sitting, clothed in white raiment; and they had on their heads crowns of gold. 5. And [k] out of the throne proceeded lightnings, and thunderings, and voices: and there were [l] seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the seven Spirits of God. 6. And before the throne there was [m] a sea of glass like unto crystal: and in the midst of the throne, and round about the throne, were [n] four beasts full of eyes before and behind. 7. And the first beast was like a lion, and the second beast like a calf, and the third beast had a face as a man, and the fourth beast was like a flying eagle.

Verses 1—7. Prepared by what he had seen for further discoveries, a door is opened to him in heaven, and the voice of Jesus, which he had heard before, loud and solemn as the trumpet which was heard of old from Sinai's top, calls him to come up thither, that he might be informed of the great events of providence relative to the church. Instantly a sacred rapture seized his spirit, and a glorious vision presents itself to his view.

1. He saw a throne of majesty and judgment, compassed with a rainbow beautiful as the emerald, the emblem of that everlasting covenant which God hath established with his people, on whom no deluge of wrath shall ever descend. (See Gen. ix. 13, &c.)

2. Upon the throne sat the eternal Jehovah, the Ancient of Days, the Creator, Governor, and Judge of all; shining like the jasper and sardine stone, with brightness infinitely surpassing those precious stones which glittered in the high-priest's breast-plate, inexpressibly glorious in holiness, and every divine perfection.

3. Around the throne were four and twenty elders seated, clothed with white raiment, and on their heads they had crowns of gold; the representatives of the whole body of the faithful, now perfected in holiness, admitted to their eternal rest, brought into God's immediate presence, enjoying that beatific vision, and crowned with glory, honour, and immortality.

4. Out of the throne proceeded lightnings, and thunderings, and voices, signifying the mighty and powerful energy of the gospel-word, which spread like lightning through the world, or those tremendous judgments which he executes on the earth.

5. There were seven lamps burning before the throne, which are the seven Spirits of God, the emblem of the variety and perfection of the gifts and graces which the Holy Ghost bestows.

6. Before the throne was a sea of glass, like unto crystal, in allusion, as is supposed, to the molten sea, where the priests washed, (Exod. xxx. 18, 19.) the figure of Christ's blood, which cleanseth from all sin.

7. In the midst of the throne, and round about it were four living creatures, full of eyes before and behind; the first like a lion, the second like an ox, the third with the face of a man, and the fourth like a flying eagle; the same as Ezek. i. 5. and seem to represent the ministers of grace, who are themselves alive to God by his Spirit; the happy instruments of quickening others; standing between God and the people, to speak in his name; full of light and spiritual understanding; bold in the cause of truth as lions; indefatigable in labour as the ox; possessed of all prudence and compassion as men; soaring high as the eagle in the knowledge of divine mysteries, and winging their flight heavenward, with unremitting zeal and ardour.

8. And the four beasts had each of them [o] six wings about him; and they were [p] full of eyes within: and † they [q] rest not day and night, saying, [r] Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come. 9. And [s] when those beasts give glory, and honour, and thanks, to him that sat on the throne, who [t] liveth for ever and ever, 10. The four and twenty elders [u] fall down before him that sat on the throne, and worship him that liveth for ever and ever, and cast their crowns before the throne, saying, 11. [x] Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory, and honour, and power: [y] for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created.

Verses 8—11. The four living creatures, like the seraphim, (Isa. vi. 2.) had six wings, and they were full of eyes within, deep-read in the knowledge of their own hearts, and attending to the notices of God's Spirit in their souls; and with ceaseless adorations they worship the eternal, unchangeable, holy, and triune Jehovah.

When these representatives of the gospel ministers thus led the song of heaven, the elders, who represented the church of the redeemed, joined in their adorations, casting their crowns before the throne, and humbly prostrate, ascribed eternal glory, honour, and power, to the ever-living Jehovah, the Creator and Ruler of all, by whose sovereign pleasure every creature exists, and is designed to show forth his praise. Note, (1.) All things are of God, and for God: his own glory is the end of all his works, and should be the design of ours. (2.) God's saints on earth are called upon to join the services of heaven, and to unite in the same sacred ascriptions of praise to him that liveth for ever and ever. (3.) The highest are the humblest beings: they who approach nearest to the throne, are most deeply sensible, that to sovereign grace alone they owe their unutterable bliss, and therefore cast down their golden crowns before their Lord, and say, Thou, and thou alone, art worthy to receive the glory.

CHAP. V.—ANNO DOMINI, 96.

In the foregoing chapter the prophetical sense was opened in the sight and hearing of the apostle. He saw God on the throne of glory and government, surrounded with his holy ones, and receiving their adorations. Now the counsels and decrees of God are set before the apostle, as in a book, which God held in his right hand; and this book is represented, 1. As sealed in the hand of God, from ver. 1—6. 2. As taken into the hand of Christ the Redeemer, to be unsealed and opened, from ver. 6. to the end.

1. AND I saw in the [a] right hand of him that sat on the throne [b] a book written within and on the backside, sealed with seven seals. 2. And I saw a strong angel proclaiming with a loud voice, [c] Who is worthy to open the book and to loose the seals thereof? 3. And [d] no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth, was able to open the book, neither to look thereon. 4. And [e] I wept much, because no man was found worthy to open and to read the book, neither to look thereon. 5. [f] And one of the elders saith unto me, [g] Weep not: behold, [h] the Lion of the tribe of Juda, the root of David, [i] hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof.

Verses 1—5. We have here,

1. The prophetic volume, which was in the hand of him that sat on the throne, containing the events which in succeeding ages should befall his church. It was written within and on the backside, like Ezekiel's roll. Or, on the backside, may be joined with the following clause, as sealed there with seven seals; not probably all on the outside, but as there were seven parchment rolls, one under the other, when the first seal was opened, and the volume unrolled, then the second seal and volume appeared. Known to God from the beginning are all his works, but they are inscrutable by us, till in his word he is pleased to reveal his designs, or by his providence to accomplish his eternal purposes.

2. The proclamation issued forth by a strong angel: Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof? but no creature was found in heaven, earth, or hell, capable of penetrating into the divine decrees, or of foretelling the events of futurity. This is God's prerogative alone.

3. The grief of the apostle at finding no creature who dared assay the arduous task. He wept bitterly, that he could not gain a knowledge of the things contained in the book, apprehending them to be of signal importance.

4. One of the elders kindly observed his tears, and cheered his afflicted heart, saying, Weep not: behold the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the mighty Lord and Saviour, the root of David, not only after the flesh his offspring, but, as God, the source of all honour and blessedness to his people, hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof. Note, God's people are often needlessly afflicting themselves with fears: were their eyes more steadily fixed upon their great Redeemer, their tears never need to flow.

6. And I beheld, and, lo, [k] in the midst of the throne and of the four beasts, and in the midst of the elders, stood [l] a Lamb as it had been slain, having [m] seven horns and [n] seven eyes, which are the seven Spirits of God sent forth into all the earth. 7. And he came and took the book out of the right hand of him that sat upon the throne. 8. And when he had taken the book, the four beasts and four and twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, [o] having every one of them harps, and golden vials full of * odours, which are the prayers of saints. 9. And they sung a [p] new song, saying, [q] Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for [r] thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; 10. [s] And hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth. 11. And I beheld, and I heard the voice of [t] many angels round about the throne and the beasts and the elders: and the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands; 12. Saying with a loud voice, [u] Worthy is the Lamb that was slain [x] to receive power, and riches and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing. 13. [y] And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honour, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever. 14. [z] And the four beasts said, Amen. And the four and twenty elders fell down and worshipped him that liveth for ever and ever.

Verses 6—14. Behold, the wonderful personage appears, alone found worthy to unloose the seals, and unfold this sacred volume.

1. He is described, as a Lamb that had been slain, and by his own blood having taken away the sins of the world, stood as our great high priest, just before the throne, within the circle of the elders and the living creatures, as the advocate of his redeemed, and ever pleading the oblation he once offered in his own body on the tree. He had seven horns, denoting the perfection of his power and dominion as the universal King over his church, to protect his people, and push his enemies till he hath consumed them: and his seven eyes, which are the seven Spirits of God sent forth into all the earth, represent the treasures of wisdom, grace, and knowledge, which as the great prophet he possesses and dispenses to all his ministers and members, according to their various wants. He came, as fully qualified in the virtue of his all-sufficient merit, and took the book out of the right hand of him that sat upon the throne, who readily gave it to him, acknowledging thereby, that he was worthy to unloose the seals, and reveal the mysterious contents.

2. Instantly all heaven resounds with praise; the church triumphant in heaven begin the song, angels repeat the sound, and every creature joins the sacred choir, and echoes loud allelujahs.

[1.] The four beasts and four and twenty elders fall down before the Lamb with humble adoration, their hearts, like their golden lyres, tuned to their Redeemer's praise, and vials full of the most grateful incense, even the prayers of the saints, breathed before him their sweet perfume. United in sacred chorus, high they raised their voices, and uttered this most glorious song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: qualified fully for the discharge of thy mediatorial office; for thou wast slain for our transgressions, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; that we thy chosen might be delivered from the bondage of sin, Satan, and death, and restored to favour and communion with the Most High: and hast made us unto our God, now reconciled in a covenant of everlasting love, kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth, exalted to the highest dignity and honour, and raised superior to all our spiritual enemies. Who can without some glow of the same sacred rapture read their song, or not long to join with them before the throne!

[2.] The angels, who, in shining ranks innumerable encompassed the throne, the living creatures, and the elders, joined their adorations, and cried, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing.

[3.] The whole creation echoes back the sound. All in heaven, earth, or sea, whether angels, the spirits of the just departed, the living here below, creatures animate or inanimate; all, all utter forth their united praises, saying, Blessing, and honour, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever! The same divine glory is ascribed to each of the sacred Persons, as being one in essence, and alike the objects of every creature's worship and adoration.

[4.] The four living creatures close with their solemn Amen, and the four and twenty elders, the representatives of the church, with humble prostration fell down and worshipped him that liveth for ever and ever. Oh, when shall I join this heavenly choir, and with them in heart and lip unite in these eternal praises of God and of the Lamb!

CHAP. VI.—ANNO DOMINI, 96.

Hitherto the waters of the sanctuary have been as those in Ezekiel's vision, only to the ancles, or to the knees, or to the loins, at least; but here they begin to be a river that cannot be passed over. The visions which John saw, the epistles to the churches, the songs of praise, in the two foregoing chapters, had some things dark and hard to be understood; and yet they were rather milk for babes, than meat for strong men; but now we are to launch into the deep, and our business is not so much to fathom it, as to let down our net to take a draught.

In this chapter six of the seven seals are opened, and the visions attending them are related; the first seal in ver. 1, 2. the second seal in ver. 3, 4. the third seal in ver. 5, 6. the fourth seal in ver. 7, 8. the fifth seal in ver. 9—11. the sixth seal in ver. 12, 13. &c.

1. AND I saw when the Lamb [a]opened one of the seals, and I heard, as it were [b]the noise of thunder, [c]one of the four beasts saying, Come and see. 2. And I saw, and behold [d]a white horse; [c]and he that sat on him had a bow; and a crown was given unto him; and he went forth conquering, and to conquer.

Verses 1, 2. The six first seals are supposed to contain the events relative to the church under the heathen emperors, till in the reign of Constantine Paganism was utterly subverted, about the year 323.

On the Lamb's opening the first seal, one of the living creatures, with a voice loud as the thunder, summoned the apostle's attention, and bid him come and see the vision. When lo! a white horse appeared, and one sat thereon, carrying a bow, and a crown on his head; and he went forth conquering and to conquer. This represents the ministration of the gospel, which brings joy, and peace, and triumph to the soul, of which the white horse is the emblem. The bow of Jesus, like that of Jonathan, returns not empty; the arrows of his gospel, through the power of the Spirit, becomes effectual to subdue the sinners' souls: his crown denotes his victories and dignity; he must prevail: and, in spite of all opposition, his gospel shall go on conquering and to conquer; till in the hearts of his redeemed every corruption is subdued; till throughout the world his truth is diffused; and to the latest ages he will continue his conquests, till the kingdoms of the earth shall become the kingdoms of the Lord and of his Christ. Hasten, O Lord, that happy day.

3. [f]And when he had opened the second seal, I heard the [g]second beast say, Come and see. 4. And there went out [h]another horse that was red: and power was given to him that sat thereon to take peace from the earth, and that they should kill one another: and there was given unto him a great sword.

Verses 3, 4. The second seal being opened, he hath a summons repeated from the second beast to come and see. And behold a red horse, and one armed with a sword sat thereon, to whom power was given to take peace from the earth. And this seems to prefigure the bloody wars, which, during the reigns of Trajan and Adrian, consumed innumerable multitudes of Jews and Romans, the common persecutors of Christianity, till about the year 138. Note, (1.) Persecutors of God's people shall have blood given them to drink. (2.) The Lord can set his enemies at variance among themselves, and makes often one wicked nation to be the scourge of his vengeance upon another.

5. And when [i]he had opened the third seal, I heard the [k]third beast say, Come and see. And I beheld, and lo a [l]black horse; and he that sat on him had [m]a pair of balances in his hand. 6. And I heard a voice in the midst of the four beasts say, † A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny; and [n]see thou hurt not the oil and the wine.

Verses 5, 6. The third seal opens, and another summons bids him come and see; when, lo, a black horse, the emblem of famine, appeared, and one with a pair of balances sat on him; when one of the beasts cried, A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny; and see thou hurt not the oil and the wine. The famine would fall chiefly on the poor, who, for the price of a whole day's labour, could but just procure bread for their subsistence, which happened under the reigns of the two Antonines, between the years 139 and 179. Note, When one judgment is not effectual to lead sinners to repentance, a second follows at its heels.

7. And when he had opened the fourth seal, I heard the voice of [o]the fourth beast say, Come and see. 8. And I looked, and behold a [p]pale horse: and his name that sat on him was Death, and hell followed with him. And power was given ‡ unto them over the fourth part of the earth, [q]to kill with sword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth.

Verses 7, 8. The fourth seal being opened, the fourth beast bids him come and see: when behold a pale horse; Death sat thereon, and the grave attended him, to devour the corpses of the fallen; or hell, to receive their souls. By war, by famine, by pestilence, and the beasts of the earth, permission is given them to slay even a fourth part of the earth: and history informs us of the dreadful desolations which wasted the Roman empire, from the reign of Maximinus to Dioclesian, in righteous vengeance for their bloody persecutions of Christianity. Note, (1.) Death marches as a conqueror through the earth; and, when attended with hell at his feet, is indeed a king of terrors. (2.) God's quiver is never exhausted, and when he contends, he must prevail.

9. And when [r] he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the [s] altar the souls of them [t] that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held: 10. And [u] they cried with a loud voice, saying, [x] How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? 11. And [y] white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellow-servants also and their brethren, that [z] should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled.

Verses 9—11. On opening the fifth seal a new scene is disclosed. The souls of the martyrs appear at the foot of the altar of incense, who had been slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held; and they united in their fervent supplications, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not display these perfections, and judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? In answer to their prayer, and in token of their acceptance, white robes, the emblems of righteousness and honour, were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, patiently expecting their final triumphs over all their foes, until their fellow-servants also, and their brethren that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled; and then a period should be put to the bloody persecutions of the Pagan emperors, by the accession of Constantine, about the year 323. Note, (1.) The blood of martyrs, and the sufferings of the persecuted, cry for vengeance to a holy God, and it will surely come upon the heads of their enemies. (2.) The time for the exercise of faith and patience is a little season; but the glory which shall follow will be eternal.

12. And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and lo, [a] there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood; 13. And the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her ‖ untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind. 14. And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together: [b] and every mountain and island were moved out of their places. 15. [c] And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bond man, and every free man, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; 16. [d] And said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: 17. Verses 12—17. On opening the sixth seal, a dreadful earthquake seemed to threaten universal destruction. The luminaries of heaven grew dark as sackcloth; the stars dropped, extinguished from their spheres, as when the storm shakes down the untimely figs; the heaven itself departed as a scroll; every island and mountain fled affrighted: and universal consternation seized all ranks and degrees, from the king upon the throne to the meanest slave, who sought for shelter in dens and caves, and in their horror wished to be for ever covered under the rocks and mountains, from the face of him who sat upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for now by woeful experience they felt his terrible vengeance, which they could neither flee from nor resist.

This vision seems to represent the utter and irrecoverable overthrow of heathenism, when that wonderful revolution was brought about in the empire, and under Constantine idolatry was abolished, the idols of Paganism destroyed, and all those who had before been the inveterate enemies of the Christian name, covered with confusion.

And what is here represented in vision will be most emphatically verified in the great day of perdition of ungodly men. When trembling before the intolerable wrath of the offended Judge, in vain the mountains and rocks will be invoked to fall on the sinner's guilty head; naked and defenceless he must be exposed to all the furious blasts of vengeance, and sink down into everlasting burnings, under black unfathomable despair! Lord, gather not my soul with sinners!

CHAP. VII.—ANNO DOMINI, 96.

After the opening of the six seals, which foretold great calamities in the world; and before the sound of the seven trumpets, which gave notice of great corruptions arising in the church; a short respite is given to the church, from the years 323 to 337. We have, 1. An account of the restraint laid upon the winds, ver. 1—3. 2. The sealing of the servants of God, ver. 4—9. 3. The songs of angels and saints on this occasion, ver. 9—13. 4. A description of the honour and happiness of those that had faithfully served Christ and suffered for him, ver. 13, &c.

1. AND after [a] these things I saw [b] four angels standing on the four corners of the earth, holding [c] the four winds of the earth, that the wind should not blow on the earth, nor on the sea, nor on any tree. 2. And I saw [d] another angel ascending from the east, [e] having the seal of the living God: and he cried with a loud voice to the four angels, [f] to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea, 3. Saying, [g] Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have [h] sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads.

Verses 1—3. The winds and storms of persecution are now for a while hushed in peace, and the church enjoys undisturbed tranquillity; whilst ministering angels, at the command of the great and uncreated Angel of the covenant, who bore the impress of the living God, and bestows his Spirit upon his people, whereby they are sealed unto the day of redemption, restrain for a while the desolating judgments which had before destroyed the earth.

4. And I heard the number of them which were sealed: [i] and there were sealed an hundred and forty and four thousand of all the tribes of the children of Israel. 5. [k] Of the tribe of Judah were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Reuben were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Gad were sealed twelve thousand. 6. Verses 4—8. The saints, who are here sealed out of the twelve tribes, are the emblems of the elect of God out of all nations in all ages. The tribes of Dan and Ephraim, as ringleaders in idolatry, are omitted, a brand of just reproach being set upon them for such apostasy from God. Note, God's people are sealed ones; he knoweth those that are his.

9. After this I beheld, and, lo, [l] a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, [m] clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands; 10. And cried with a loud voice, saying, [n] Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb. 11. [o] And all the angels stood round about the throne, and about the elders and the four beasts, and fell before the throne on their faces, and worshipped God, 12. Saying, [p] Amen: blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and might, be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen.

Verses 9—12. We have here a glorious scene of the happy state of the church, either during the Millennium, as some suppose, or when the redeemed shall be finally entered into their eternal rest.

1. They are a great multitude which no man could number; though few comparatively in any one age or nation, yet, when collected in the great congregation, they will be innumerable.

2. They stand before the throne and before the Lamb, with holy boldness and sure acceptance, clothed with white robes, the emblems of honour, joy, and purity, and palms in their hands, in token of their glorious victories obtained over all their foes; for all God's saints shall assuredly be finally triumphant over their foes.

3. They lifted up their voices in loud hallelujahs, crying, Salvation to our God who sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb; all glory, praise, and adoration be ascribed to him, for that complete salvation which he hath wrought out for us, and freely bestowed upon us.

4. The angelic hosts, with the elders and living creatures which stood before the throne, immediately joined in their adorations, and falling on their faces worshipped God, saying, Amen! Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and might, be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen! The inhabitants of heaven have all one mind and employment, ceaseless in the praises of their common Lord. May we now delight to join their songs, and prepare hereby for the happy service of eternity!

13. And [q] one of the elders answered, saying unto me, What are these which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they? 14. And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said to me, These are they [r] which came out of great tribulation, and [s] have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. 15. Therefore are they [t] before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple: and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them. 16. [u] They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. 17. For the Lamb, which is in the midst of the throne, [x] shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: [y] and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.

Verses 13—17. Whilst John, with holy rapture, beheld the heavenly vision, one of the elders questions him, whether he understood what he saw, and knew who these were and whence they came? With humble acknowledgment of his ignorance, and desire of information, he replied, Sir, thou knowest. The elder thereupon kindly undertook to inform him.

1. These, saith he, are they who came out of great tribulation, through various afflictions, and the fire of persecution, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God, not on account of their own deserts or sufferings, but as having overcome through the blood of Jesus, applied to their hearts by faith for their complete justification before God. Note, Our title to eternal blessedness depends not upon what we do or suffer for Christ, but upon what he hath done and suffered for us, when he perfected his people by one oblation once offered.

2. He informs him of the distinguished dignity and glory to which these once suffering saints were admitted. They are before the throne of God, admitted to the immediate presence of the Eternal Majesty, and serve him day and night in his celestial temple, without ceasing: and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them for ever, as the author and source of their eternal felicity. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more, knowing no more these painful cravings, neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat, no fire of persecution, nor furnace of affliction or temptation shall there be ever apprehended: For the Lamb who is in the midst of the throne, possessed of all dominion and power, shall feed them with his rich provision, and shall lead them unto fountains of living waters, to refresh and comfort their souls, which from his presence shall drink in pleasures as out of a river: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; no sin, no sorrow shall be there, nor one salt tear ever again trickle down their faces, but unutterable and uninterrupted consolations shall be their eternal happy portion. Bring me, dear Lord, to share this blessedness among thy saints in light.

CHAP. VIII. ANNO DOMINI, 96.

We have already seen what occurred upon opening six of the seals, we come now to the opening of the seventh, which introduced the sounding of the seven trumpets, and a direful scene now opens: most expositors agree, the seven seals represent the intervals between the apostles' time and the reign of Constantine, but the seven trumpets are designed to represent the rise of antichrist, some time after the empire became Christian. In this chapter we have the preface, or prelude, to the sounding of the trumpets, ver. 1—7. 2. The sounding of four of the trumpets, ver. 7, &c.

1. AND when he had opened the seventh seal, there was [a] silence in heaven about the space of half an hour. 2. And I saw the [b] seven [c] angels which stood before God; and to them were given seven [d] trumpets. 3. And [e] another angel came and [f] stood at the altar, having a golden censer; and there was given unto him [g] much incense, that he should * offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar, which was before the throne. 4. [h] And the smoke of the incense, which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God out of the angel's hand. 5. And the angel took the censer, [i] and filled it with fire of the altar, and cast it into the earth: [k] and there were voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, and an earthquake. 6. And the seven angels which had the seven trumpets prepared themselves to sound.

Verses 1—6. The former seals related to the events which should happen to the Roman empire whilst Pagan; the last seal includes the dreadful judgments of God upon the degenerate Christian empire, after the short state of prosperity enjoyed under Constantine, represented here by the silence observed in heaven for half an hour, when a new scene opens to view.

1. Seven angels present themselves before God, the instruments of his providence, and seven trumpets are given them to proclaim the judgments in so many successive periods about to be executed on the earth.

2. Another angel, the Lord of the angelic host, and the uncreated angel of the covenant appears, and as the great high priest of his people, offers upon the golden altar much incense, making the prayers of his saints acceptable before the throne of God, through his own sacrifice and intercession. Note, (1.) God's saints are known by their continual life of prayer; they who never pray have no part or lot in Christ's salvation. (2.) Not for their own sakes do our prayers come up with acceptance before the throne, but for his, who ever liveth to make intercession for us.

3. Having secured a gracious answer to his people's prayers, this great angel gives the signal for his judgments to break forth upon his enemies; filling his censer with fire from the altar, he cast it into the earth, the Roman empire, and terrible thunderings, lightnings, and voices followed, and a great earthquake, emblems of the dreadful vengeance ready to be executed, and immediately the angels prepared to sound their trumpets.

7. The first angel sounded, and there followed [l] hail and fire mingled with blood, and they were cast upon the earth: [m] and the third part of trees was burnt up, and all green grass was burnt up. 8. And the second angel sounded, [n] and as it were a great mountain burning with fire was cast into the sea: and the third part of the sea became blood; 9. And [o] the third part of the creatures which were in the sea, and had life, died; and the third part of the ships were destroyed. 10. And the third angel sounded, and there [p] fell a great star from heaven, burning as it were a lamp; and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters: 11. And the name of the star is called [q] Wormwood: and the third part of the waters became wormwood; and many men died of the waters, because they were made bitter. 12. And the fourth angel sounded, [r] and the third part of the sun was smitten, and the third part of the moon, and the third part of the stars; so as the third part of them was darkened, and the day shone not for a third part of it, and the night likewise. 13. And I beheld, and heard [s] an angel flying through the midst of heaven, saying with a loud voice, [t] Woe, woe, woe, to the inhabiters of the earth, by reason of the other voices of the trumpet of the three angels, which are yet to sound!

Verses 7—13.

1. The first trumpet sounds, and hail, fire, and blood mingled therewith, like one of the plagues of Egypt, followed, by which a third part of the trees, and every green thing was consumed, denoting the civil wars between the sons of Constantine, which ended, after prodigious slaughter, with the destruction of his family, between the years 337—379; and the Goths also then began to break in and ravage the empire.

2. The second trumpet sounds the alarm, and a burning mountain hurled into the sea, converts the third part of it into blood, and slays the third part of all the creatures that lived therein, or sailed upon it. And this is supposed to refer to the irruptions of the Goths and Vandals into the empire, when under Alaric they penetrated into Italy, and sacked Rome itself, between the years 379 and 412.

3. The third trumpet is blown, and a falling star, called Wormwood, embittered the third part of the waters, and a great mortality ensued; and this denotes the fearful desolations wrought by the Goths and Vandals between the years 412 and 493; under Genseric, they ravaged Italy and plundered Rome about the year 445, and afterwards, under Odoacer, they took Rome, dethroned Augustulus, and their general assumed the title of king.

4. The fourth trumpet sounds, and a total eclipse of all the luminaries of heaven over the third part of the earth followed; signifying the dreadful darkness and ignorance that, under the barbarous nations, which ravaged the empire, generally prevailed. The seat of empire was also under Odoacer translated from Rome to Ravenna, and though no alteration was then made in the government, yet when Justinian afterwards recovered Italy from the Goths, and erected the exarchate of Ravenna, Rome was only a petty dukedom, her senate and councils were abolished, and it became subject to the exarch of Ravenna. Whilst, with attentive expectation, John waited for the sounding of the other trumpets, a mighty angel, flying through the midst of heaven, cried aloud, Wo, wo, wo to the inhabiters of the earth, by reason of the other voices of the trumpet of the three angels which are yet to sound. Note, (1.) God warns before he strikes. (2.) Lesser judgments, when slighted, will assuredly be followed with others more tremendous.

CHAP. IX.—ANNO DOMINI, 96.

In this chapter we have an account of the sounding of the fifth and sixth trumpets, the appearances which attended them, and the events that were to follow the fifth trumpet, ver. 1—13. the sixth, ver. 13, &c.

1. AND [a] the fifth angel sounded, and I saw [b] a star fall from heaven unto the earth: and [c] to him was given the key of the [d] bottomless pit. 2. And he opened the bottomless pit; and [e] there arose a smoke out of the pit, as the smoke of a great furnace; and the sun and the air were darkened by reason of the smoke of the pit. 3. And there came out of the smoke [f] locusts upon the earth: [g] and unto them was given power, as the scorpions of the earth have power. 4. And it was commanded them that they [h] should not hurt the grass of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any tree; [i] but only those men which have not the seal of God in their foreheads. 5. [k] And to them it was given that they should not kill them, but that they should be tormented five months: and their torment was as the torment of a scorpion when he striketh a man. 6. [l] And in those days shall men seek death, and shall not find it; and shall desire to die, and death shall flee from them. 7. [m] And the shapes of the locusts were like unto horses prepared unto battle; and on their heads were as it were crowns like gold, and their [n] faces were as the faces of men. 8. And they had [o] hair as the hair of women, and their [p] teeth were as the teeth of lions. 9. [q] And they had breastplates, as it were breastplates of iron; and the [r] sound of their wings was as the sound of chariots of many horses running to battle. 10. And they had [s] tails like unto scorpions, and there were stings in their tails: and their power was to hurt men five months. 11. And they had [t] a king over them, which is the angel of the bottomless pit, whose name in the Hebrew tongue is * Abaddon, but in the Greek tongue hath his name * Apollyon. 12. [u] One woe is past; and, behold, there come two woes more hereafter.

Verses 1—12. The fifth trumpet is supposed to refer to the rise of the impostor Mahomet, who is the star here spoken off, infecting the earth like a pestilential meteor with his abominable falsehoods, permission being given him to open the bottomless pit, and a cloud of errors, black as the darkness of hell itself, immediately burst out, and covered the east; innumerable multitudes of Saracens; thick as locusts, under his banners, rushed forth: they chiefly consisted of cavalry, made dreadful incursions into the empire, with turbans like crowns on their heads; wore long hair like women; strong as lions; defended with armour, weapon proof; and rushed with irresistible fury on their foes. Satan, the angel of the bottomless pit, the great destroyer of men, was at their head: and such was the misery which they every where spread through the apostate church, that death appeared preferable to life; but to the elect of God, the sealed in the earth, the power of these destroyers reached not; they were not to be deceived by the wiles of imposture, nor terrified from their profession by any danger of threatenings. The space contained within this seal extends from 568 to 675. Note, (1.) The heaviest judgments upon the world are those, when God lets loose the great deceiver; and because men turn away from the truth, he gives them up to strong delusions, to believe a lie. (2.) Heresy and error, like the scorpion's sting, infuse baleful poison into the soul. (3.) Satan, and all his emissaries, are under a divine restraint; God saith unto them, hitherto shall ye come, and no farther. (4.) Whatever prevalence of delusion there may be, God's people shall every one of them be preserved in the most trying times.

One wo is now past, two more are yet to come.

Verses 13—21. On the sounding of the sixth angel, the voice of Christ is heard from the four horns of the golden altar, which is before God, the emblem of the prevalence of his intercession for all his people in the four parts of the earth; his command to the sixth angel is, that he should loose the four angels that were bound in the great river Euphrates, and let them have power for an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year, to slay the third part of men. This may be referred to the intestine quarrels among the successors of Mahomet, which for about fifty years prevented them from spreading their conquests in the empire; but afterwards from 675 to 750, they carried their arms far and wide through Egypt, Africa, and Spain: their forces were innumerable and invincible, chiefly consisting of cavalry, and breathing forth threatening and slaughter through the earth; and, like scorpions, they infused their poisonous tenets wherever their arms prevailed. Yet all these heavy judgments reclaimed not those who bore the Christian name, but dishonoured it by the vilest abominations; nor did they repent of their idolatries, the worship of demons and images, unable to hear or answer their more stupid votaries, but continued in the practice of murder, sorcery, fornication, and theft, and all those miscalled pious frauds which priestcraft invented to beguile the superstitious: therefore more deadly woes are yet in store for them. Note, (1.) God sends his judgments that sinners may turn from the evil of their ways. (2.) They who under God's visitations harden their hearts, must inevitably perish at the last.

CHAP. X.—ANNO DOMINI, 96.

This chapter is an introduction to the latter part of the prophecies of this book. Here we have, 1. A remarkable description of a very glorious angel with an open book in his hand, ver. 1—3. 2. An account of seven thunders which the apostle heard, as echoing to this voice of the angel, and communicating some discoveries, which the apostle was not yet allowed to write. 3. The solemn oath taken by him who had the book in his hand, ver. 5—7. 4. The charge given to the apostle, and observed by him, ver. 8—11.

Verses 1—7. Another vision intervenes between the sixth and seventh trumpet, as before between the sixth and seventh seal.

1. A glorious angel, even the same divine personage whose voice was heard before, giving the angels their commission, (chap. vii. 2.) comes down from heaven clothed with a cloud, and around his head the rainbow glowed, the token of his mindfulness of the everlasting covenant, his countenance like the sun, cheering the hearts of his people, and his feet as pillars of fire, firm to support the interests of his church, and terrible to tread down her enemies. In his hand he held a little book, the last volume of the roll which he had opened, and was about to reveal the contents of it; and, setting one foot on the earth, the other on the sea, to intimate his universal dominion, loud as the lion roars he uttered his voice, and instantly seven mighty thunders, the emblems of the judgments about to follow, echoed back the sound. Being about to minute down the articulate denunciations uttered by these thunders, John is restrained by a voice from heaven, saying, Seal up those things, and write them not.

2. The angel that stood on the earth and sea then lifted up his hand to heaven, and, with a solemn oath sware by the great Creator of all things, that there should be time no longer; but that when the time and times and half a time (Dan. xii. 7.) are expired, the 1260 years of the reign of Antichrist, then an end should be put to the Antichristian tyranny for ever, and that, within the period of the seventh trumpet, the mystery of God should be finished, his designs of grace accomplished, and his great salvation spread from pole to pole; as of old had been shown to his prophets, Dan. vii. 25—28. xiii. 6, 7. Zech. xiv. 8.

8. And [o] the voice which I heard from heaven spake unto me again, and said, Go, and [p] take the little book which is open in the hand of the angel which standeth upon the sea and upon the earth. 9. And I went unto the angel, and said unto him, Give me the little book. And he said unto me, [q] Take it, and eat it up: and [r] it shall make thy belly bitter, but it shall be in thy mouth sweet as honey. 10. [s] And I took the little book out of the angel's hand, and ate it up; and it was in my mouth sweet as honey: and as soon as I had eaten it, my belly was bitter. 11. And he said unto me, Thou must [t] prophesy again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings.

Verses 8—11. The same voice which he had heard from heaven,

1. Commands him to go and take the volume out of the angel's hand who stood on the earth and sea, who gave it to him, and bid him eat it up; digesting the awful contents therein revealed, telling him, that though sweet in his mouth, it would make his belly bitter; desirable as it was to know the events of futurity, the awful desolations about to come upon the earth, and the sufferings of the church, could not but inwardly grieve and afflict him.

2. The apostle obeyed, and found the word true which had been spoken; sweet as the book was in his mouth, as honey, his belly was made bitter as gall, and the burdens he foresaw deeply affected him; but he must not conceal the secrets communicated to him; he is commanded to prophesy concerning the events which must successively come to pass before many people, and nations, and tongues, and kings. Note, Preachers must first themselves digest and be deeply affected with the truths which they deliver to others.

CHAP. XI.—ANNO DOMINI, 96.

In this chapter we have an account, 1. Of the measuring reed given to the apostle to take the dimensions of the temple, ver. 1, 2. 2. Of the two witnesses of God, ver. 3—14. 3. Of the sounding of the seventh trumpet, and what followed upon it, ver. 14, &c.

1. AND there was given me a [a] reed like unto a rod: and the [b] angel stood, saying, Rise, and [c] measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein. 2. But [d] the court which is without the temple * leave out, and measure it not; for it is given unto the Gentiles: and the holy city shall they tread under foot [e] forty and two months. 3. And [f] I will give power unto my [g] two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth. 4. These are the [h] two olive trees, and the [i] two candlesticks [k] standing before the God of the earth. 5. [l] And if any man will hurt them, fire proceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies: and if any man will hurt them, he must in this manner be killed. 6. [m] These have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy: and [n] have power over waters to turn them to blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues as often as they will. 7. And when they shall have [o] finished their testimony, [p] the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them. 8. And their [q] dead bodies shall lie in the street of [r] the great city, which spiritually is called [s] Sodom and Egypt, where also [t] our Lord was crucified. 9. [u] And they of the people, and kindreds, and tongues, and nations, shall see their dead bodies three days and an half, and [x] shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves. 10. [y] And they that dwell upon the earth shall [z] rejoice over them, and make merry, and shall send gifts to one another; because [a] these two prophets tormented them that dwelt on the earth. 11. [b] And after three days and an half [c] the Spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet; and [d] great fear fell upon them which saw them. 12. And they heard a great voice from heaven, saying unto them, [e] Come up hither. And they ascended up to heaven in a cloud; and their enemies [f] beheld them. 13. And the same hour was there a [g] great earthquake, and the tenth part of the city fell; and in the earthquake were slain [h] of men seven thousand: and the remnant [i] were affrighted, and gave glory to the God of heaven.

Verses 1—13. A general description is here given of the state both of the true and the antichristian church, during 1260 years, from the time that the temporal power of the Pope arose, about 756.

1. John is commanded to measure the temple of God, and the altar, and the worshippers: for, in the worst of times, and in the darkest days, God would still maintain his church, and some should be preserved from the general apostasy, a remnant according to the election of grace. The outer court he may not measure, that is left to the Gentiles; those indeed who profess to bear the Christian name, but by the idolatry, superstitions, and frauds which they encourage and maintain, are returned in reality to the worship of Paganism, Popery being heathenism revived: and during 42 months, or 1260 years, these Gentile Papists shall tread the holy city under foot, and exercise their tyrannical government over the professors of the Christian name.

2. During the prevalency of the Antichristian tyranny, God will not leave the world without warning, nor the corrupters of his worship without witness; a succession of faithful ministers shall arise, a few indeed, here spoken of but as two, and clothed in sackcloth, deeply affected with the miseries of the church, and the persecutions of the faithful remnant. These are the two olive trees, &c. like Zerubbabel and Joshua, (Zech. iv. 6—14.) whom God will supply with the continual influences of his grace, and endue with light and zeal to remonstrate against the corruptions of the Antichristian church. And if any attempt to hurt them, the word of the Lord, which proceedeth out of their mouths as fire, denounces spiritual and eternal death upon them. These have power, like Elijah, to shut up heaven, and to bring the heaviest plagues, like those of Egypt, upon their enemies; even the spiritual plagues of a famine of the word, obduracy of heart, and all the dreadful judgments that, in answer to their prayers, God will inflict on their persecutors, and which they denounce upon them, not from a spirit of revenge, but for the vindication of God's injured honour.

3. The witnesses shall be slain, while they are performing their testimony, though God will always raise up others, and avenge their blood on their persecutors; and their dead bodies shall be forbid burial, and be insulted in the streets of that great city, spiritually called Sodom and Egypt; where also our Lord was crucified, Rome papal being notorious for filthiness as Sodom, like Egypt, the cruel oppressor of God's people, and red with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus, which is as it were afresh to crucify him.

Some suppose that this slaying the witnesses by the Antichristian beast and his adherents, is yet to come, and that the three days and a half, ver. 9. refer not to the time and times and half a time, or 1260 years, the whole period of popery, but to some more dreadful persecution, and general prevalence of the power of Antichrist, which towards the close of this period will be permitted, and for a short space the inhabitants of the papal countries will congratulate each other, as if they had now finally triumphed over those who troubled their consciences with remonstrances against their impieties, idolatries, and all their abominations.

4. After three days and a half, at the close of the period of 1260 years, the witnesses are miraculously raised to life, to the terror of their enemies; not the same persons, but others endued with their spirit, boldness, and zeal: and God, in testimony of his approbation, caught them up to heaven in the sight of their enemies, not literally, but figuratively, he exalted them to a state of eminent dignity and safety, above all the malice of their foes: and thereupon a great earthquake shook down a great part of the city of the beast, and seven thousand men were slain; a vast number of his dependents and abettors, men of note and influence fell, and his jurisdiction was in part demolished; whilst the remnant, affrighted by these prodigies, renounced their idolatries and superstitions, and, converted to the faith of Jesus, glorified God. Note, (1.) The enemies of God's witnessing servants shall one day, with confusion, behold their exaltation, and know that God hath sent them. (2.) When God's judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants thereof should learn righteousness; and they who fly to God for refuge, and give him glory, shall be saved from fear of evil.

14. The [k] second woe is past; and, behold, [l] the third woe cometh quickly.
15. And the [m] seventh angel sounded; and there were [n] great voices in heaven, saying, [o] The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of the Lord, and of his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever. 16. [p] And the four and twenty elders, who sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces and worshipped God, 17. Saying, [q] We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come; because [r] thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast reigned. 18. [s] And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them which † destroy the earth. 19. [t] And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was [u] seen in his temple the ark of his testament: and [x] there were lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and great hail.

Verses 14—19. The seventh trumpet sounds, and lo, the third and last wo is denounced, when the Mahometan and Papal powers, the eastern and western Antichrist, are to be utterly destroyed. On which,

1. Loud acclamations of joy fill all the courts of heaven; the wished-for time is come when Jesus shall erect his throne, and all nations shall bow before the sceptre of his grace, and become a willing people in the day of his power, owning him as their rightful King, who shall reign over his redeemed for ever and ever. And for this the four and twenty elders pour forth their thanks to the Lord, and in humble adoration prostrate themselves before his throne, ascribing praise to the eternal and almighty Jesus, that he hath now signally made bare his arm, avenging the deaths of his martyred servants, and in return for the indignation shown by the Antichristian persecutors, pouring forth his vials of wrath upon them; whilst his faithful ministers and people now receive their glorious reward; they see their foes become their footsool, and enjoy peace, comfort, mutual communion, and the free liberty of all gospel ordinances in their highest purity. And every gracious soul, looking forward to this happy season, cannot but pray that God would hasten it in his good time.

2. The temple of God was opened in heaven; the exercise of the true evangelical worship was now restored, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament, intimating the peculiar manifestations of God's presence to all his people, the boldness that they will have to approach the holiest of all, and the sweet communion which they shall enjoy with their Lord, seeing him, as it were face to face.

3. And there were lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and great hail, as if the dissolution of all things was at hand; intimating the entire demolition of all the church's enemies. Note, Though the struggle be long and sharp, the gospel shall be finally triumphant, and the truth at last prevail over all opposition.

1. AND there appeared a great [a] wonder in heaven; [b] a woman [c] clothed with the sun, and [d] the moon under her feet, and upon her head [e] a crown of twelve stars: 2. [f] And she being with child, cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered. 3. And there appeared another † wonder in heaven; and behold [g] a great red dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads. 4. And his [h] tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and did cast them to the earth: [i] and the dragon stood before the woman which was ready to be delivered, for to devour her child as soon as it was born. 5. And [k] she brought forth a man-child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron: and [l] her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne. 6. And [m] the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and threescore days.

Verses 1—6. The same period as before is here described of 1260 years, during which,

1. A great wonder appears in heaven; the Church of Christ presented under the figure of a woman clothed with the sun, with Christ and his righteousness, having the moon under her feet, regarding all sublunary things with holy contempt; upon her head was a crown of twelve stars, the doctrines of the gospel dispensed by the apostles; and being with child, she cried out, travailing, and ready to be delivered.

2. A great red dragon appears, representing Satan, as acting by his wicked emissaries of Rome papal, with seven heads, ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads, signifying the dignity and supremacy, in spirituals, and temporals, which the bishop of Rome usurped, and his tyrannical dominion over the bodies and souls of men, drawing into superstition and idolatry multitudes, both ministers and people, who seemed before as stars in the heaven, and bringing them down to the earthly and sensual religion of the church of Rome, and with unwearied opposition and implacable enmity striving to destroy every faithful Christian, and to suppress the progress of the true religion of Jesus in the earth, ready to devour the child, of which the woman travailed, as soon as it was born.

3. God disappointed the malice of the dragon; a man-child was born, the emblem of all the spiritual seed of the woman who in succession should arise, and, in defiance of the malice of the antichristian foe, be preserved, and finally prevail over all their enemies, taken under God's immediate protection, and secure as if caught up to the throne of God: whilst the mother, the church, though in obscurity during this dark period of 1260 years, hath a place provided for her, as in the valleys of Piedmont, and other retreats, where the true religion of Jesus was preserved amidst the abounding corruptions of the church of Rome, till the Reformation took place. Note, God will ever have a church in the darkest day, and will in the desert feed his people, as he did Israel of old, with living manna.

7. [n] And there was war in heaven: [o] Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels, 8. And [p] prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven. 9. And [q] the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: [r] he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him. 10. And I heard [s] a loud voice saying in heaven, Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ; for [t] the accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night. 11. And [u] they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death. 12. Therefore [x] rejoice, ye heavens, and ye that dwell in them. [y] Woe to the inhabiters of the earth and of the sea! for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but [z] a short time.

Verses 7—12. Another representation of this period is here made.

1. There was war in heaven, in the church; Michael and his angels, the Lord Jesus and his ministers, with the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, fought against the dragon and his angels, his Popish emissaries, and all the legions of ecclesiastics in that idolatrous church. The issue of the combat was, that in spite of all the dragon's efforts he could not prevail to extinguish the truth; he was foiled in the glorious Reformation, when many states threw off the antichristian yoke, and, like a falling star, from their towering height of power and dominion, Satan, that old serpent, and his instruments of the church of Rome, were cast down; and at the end of this period the conquest will be completed.

2. Hereupon a triumphant song is sung by the church of the redeemed, who glorify God for this exertion of his power and strength in the salvation of his people from the accuser of the brethren, who by means of the antichristian persecutors, with pretended crimes, sought occasion to harass and oppress them, and day and night accused them before God. But they overcame by the blood of the Lamb, which removed all condemnation, and by the word of their testimony, the sword of the Spirit, which confounded their enemies; and so faithfully adhered they to Christ and his pure gospel, that for his sake they readily laid down their lives, and submitted to death armed with its greatest terrors. Note. (1.) All our victories are gained through the blood of the Lamb. (2.) They who know in whom they have believed, will rather part with their lives than deny the faith.

3. The saints and angels of God are called upon to rejoice in this victory, ver. 12. whilst a wo is denounced on the inhabitants of the earth and sea, on the earthly-minded, and carnal professors of Christianity; for though the kingdom of the beast be on the decline, and hath but a short time to endure, yet therein Satan will exert his utmost efforts to deceive and destroy the souls of men, and many of them will fall a prey unto his teeth.

13. And when the dragon saw that he was cast unto the earth, [a] he persecuted the woman which brought forth the man-child. 14. [b] And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness, into her place; where she is nourished [c] for a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent. 15. And the serpent cast out of his mouth [d] water as a flood after the woman, that he might cause her to be carried away of the flood. 16. And [e] the earth helped the woman, and the earth opened her mouth and swallowed up the flood which the dragon cast out of his mouth. 17. And the [f] dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to [g] make war with the remnant of her seed, [h] which keep the commandments of God, and [i] have the testimony of Jesus Christ.

Verses 13—17. By the Reformation the power of Satan and the church of Rome being greatly broken, like one cast down from heaven to earth, he mustered up all his wiles and fury, and in the Jesuits raised up a new set of instruments to persecute, with unrelenting cruelty, the mother of the man-child, the true church, as reformed from the errors of Popery. But God supplied her with eagle's wings, and bore her safe to a resting place during her wilderness state, ver. 14. until the period of the reign of antichrist, and the 1260 years come to an end. In vain the serpent cast out a flood of errors, heresies, and persecutions, and endeavoured by fraud and force to stop the progress of the Reformation, and swallow up the church; the earth helped her, the secular powers; many princes and states who were themselves under the influence of temporal motives, opposed the antichristian tyranny and persecutions: and the dragon, enraged to be thus foiled, retired to rally all his forces, and renewed with all his fury his attacks upon the woman and the remnant of her seed, which survived his former persecutions, whose distinguishing character is given, they keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ, maintaining his pure and unadulterated gospel, in opposition to all the human impositions and traditions of the Papal chair. Note, Whilst we hold the testimony of Jesus, and keep his commandments, we must be finally more than conquerors.

CHAP. XIII.—ANNO DOMINI, 96.

We have in this chapter a farther discovery and description of the church's enemies, not other enemies than are mentioned before, but described after another manner, that the methods of their enmity may more fully appear; they are represented as two beasts; the first you have an account of, ver. 1—10. the second ver. 11—18.

1. AND I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a [a] beast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the [b] name of blasphemy. 2. And the beast which I saw [c] was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion: and the [d] dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority. 3. And I saw [e] one of his heads as it were * wounded to death; and his deadly wound was healed: and [f] all the world wondered after the beast. 4. And they [g] worshipped the dragon which gave power unto the beast: and they worshipped the beast, saying, Who is like unto the beast? who is able to make war with him? 5. [h] And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies: and power was given unto him † to continue forty and two months. 6. And [k] he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name, and his [l] tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven. 7. [m] And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them: and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations. 8. [n] And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in [o] the book of life of the [p] Lamb slain [q] from the foundation of the world. 9. [r] If any man have an ear, let him hear. 10. [s] He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity: he that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword. Verses 1—10. Another vision relative to the same events as the foregoing here appears.

1. A beast rises out of the sea, with seven heads, ten horns, and crowns upon his horns, and names of blasphemy thereon, like a leopard, with the feet of a bear, and the mouth of a lion, denoting the fierceness, cruelty, and strength of the antichristian, idolatrous, and blasphemous state which should arise out of the commotions which has shaken the empire. To this beast, that is, to the Pope and his adherents, the devil would delegate his power and authority, enabling the man of sin to work his lying miracles, and establish his seat and capital at Rome, where, during the reign of Paganism, Satan especially dwelt.

2. A deadly wound was given to the beast; which some refer to the sacking of the city of Rome by the Goths, and the removal of the supreme authority from thence during the exarchate of Ravenna; and others, to the blow the church of Rome received at the Reformation; and this wound was healed; either Rome itself, under the Papal government, rose to unexpected greatness, and was held in veneration by the wondering world; or this may refer to the recovery of the Papal interests since the Reformation, and which, it is supposed, will flourish more than ever before the final downfall of Popery.

3. The people, who wondered after the beast, worshipped the dragon, the idolatrous worship of the church of Rome being, in fact, the adoration of Satan himself; and they worshipped the beast, his delegate, ascribing divine honours and titles to the Pope, exalting him above all princes and potentates, and ascribing to him a kind of omnipotence upon earth: whilst he, by horrid blasphemies, assuming the very prerogatives of the most high God, pretended, by the plenitude of his power, to forgive sins, to alter God's revealed will, to have dominion over men's consciences, and to enact canons equally, or more obligatory than the laws of God himself; blaspheming his name, and his tabernacle the church, and them that dwell in heaven, the citizens of the new Jerusalem, the faithful whom he anathematizes, or the saints and angels whose names he uses in his idolatrous worship. During the period of 1260 years his dominion will endure, and by Divine Providence he will be permitted to make war with the saints who refuse to submit to his tyrannical yoke, and to overcome them, obliging all, whose names are not written in the book of life, to worship him and submit to his idolatrous decrees. Note, Amidst the most fatal delusions and prevalence of iniquity, God's chosen ones shall be secured.

4. For the comfort of God's people, a solemn note of attention is added, and they are called to hear. This antichristian power, that enslaves and destroys others, shall as surely be subdued and destroyed in its turn; and God's saints, now with patience enduring their persecutions, must with faith confidently expect that this will be the issue. Note, It requires much faith and patience, in suffering times, to hold fast the promises of God and wait their fulfilment.

11. And [u] I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth, and he had [x] two horns like a lamb, and he [y] spake as a dragon. 12. And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, [z] and causeth the earth, and them which dwell therein, to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed. 13. [a] And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men; 14. And deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast; saying to [b] them that dwell on the earth, [c] that they should make an image to the beast which had the wound by a sword, and did live. 15. [d] And he had power to give ‡ life unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak, and [e] cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed. 16. And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, ‖ to receive [f] a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads: 17. And that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name. 18. [g] Here is wisdom. Verses 11—18. Another beast, or the same power under another form, appears like a lamb with two horns, the symbol of his dominion temporal and spiritual, who with all pretended meekness and humility, hath all the pride and rage of the old dragon, exercising all the power of the first beast, and causing all the earth to worship him, and own his universal, temporal as well as spiritual jurisdiction, with lying miracles supporting his idolatrous worship, deceiving the inhabitants of the earth, and leading them to erect the image of the first beast whose deadly wound was healed, and pay their adoration to the idol, blindly and implicitly submitting to the authority of the Pope, and the constitutions of Paganism revived in the church of Rome; giving life to the image of the beast, enforcing all the canons and laws of his idolatrous worship, by excommunications, fire, and sword; making it death to refuse obedience to the Papal power; setting a mark upon all the votaries of the beast, and excluding those who would not submit to make profession of this system of error and blasphemy, from all intercourse with the worshippers of the beast, as unworthy of every blessing of society. Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast: for it is the number of a man; and his number is six hundred threescore and six, concerning which number there have been many learned conjectures. I incline to concur with those who refer it to the time when Popery should rise to her strength about the year 756, which, if we add 666 to the time in which John wrote, will bring it nearly to that very period from whence the 1260 years of the antichristian tyranny are to be reckoned. But however dark and mysterious these prophetic hints may be, one thing we are sure of, that is plain and obvious, that God will always maintain his own church in the world, in defiance of opposition, and that all her foes shall finally become her footstool.

CHAP. XIV.—ANNO DOMINI, 96.

After an account of the great trials and sufferings which the servants of God had endured, we have a more pleasant scene opening, the day begins now to dawn; and here we have represented, 1. The Lord Jesus at the head of his faithful followers, ver. 1—6. 2. Three angels sent successively to proclaim the fall of Babylon, and the things antecedent and consequent to so great an event, ver. 6—14. 3. The vision of the harvest, ver. 14, &c.

Verses 1—5. Dark and gloomy as the former scene appeared, the sun now rises to dispel the night of idolatry, ignorance, and error.

1. The Lamb of God is seen on mount Zion with all his redeemed, sealed in their foreheads, in opposition to those who had the mark of the beast, over whom they are made triumphant; innumerable multitudes, as the drops of the ocean, with voices united, raising a chorus loud as thunder, yet melodious as the trembling harps which mingled with their concert, sung that song of praise which none but the redeemed from the earth can learn.

2. The character of those happy souls is given. They are virgins, not defiled with the idolatries of the great whore; they follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth, faithful to his gospel doctrines, and observant of his ordinances; they are a peculiar people, even the first-fruits to God and to the Lamb, specially appropriated to his service, and without guile before the throne of God, as washed in the blood and clothed in the righteousness of their Redeemer; uncorrupt by error of doctrine and immorality of conduct, and at last perfected in holiness. Blessed and happy are they who shall be found to answer these characters of the redeemed from the earth!

6. And I saw [o] another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having [p] the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, 7. Saying with [q] a loud voice, [r] Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: [s] and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. 8. And there followed another angel, saying, [t] Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because [u] she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication. 9. [x] And the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, [y] If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand, 10. [z] The same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb: 11. [a] And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name. 12. Verses 6—12. Three angels, or messengers, are sent from heaven to proclaim the fall of Babylon.

1. One bearing the everlasting gospel through the midst of heaven, cries aloud to all people, nations, and languages to fear, worship, and glorify God the great Creator, in opposition to all idols, his judgments upon his enemies speedily approaching. And this may refer either to the preaching of Luther, Calvin, and the other reformers; or to a future period, when, before the final overthrow of Popery, a noble army of preachers of the true gospel, animated with holy zeal, shall be raised up to plead the cause of God and truth.

2. Another angel followed, crying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen; and the cause of her doom is assigned, because she intoxicated the nations with her fornications and idolatries, which provoked the fearful wrath of God against her. And this seems to be the language of triumph of the faithful, who shall live in that day when Rome, with all her abominations, shall be utterly destroyed.

3. A third angel followed, denouncing the most terrible woes on the Antichristian party, who shall henceforth persist in this idolatrous religion; even the eternal torments of hell, intolerable as endless, must be their portion, in the presence of the holy angels, who will applaud the righteous judgment of God and of the Lamb, who inflicts it upon them: and the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever; and they have no rest, day nor night. How fearful the scene! how loudly doth it preach to us, Flee from idolatry!

4. Here is the patience of the saints; the blessed issue and effect of it: here in glory are they who keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus, in opposition to all the corruptions of deceivers and persecutors; great and eternal will be their reward.

13. And I heard a voice from heaven, saying unto me, Write, [c] Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord † from henceforth: [d] Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours; and [e] their works do follow them. 14. And I looked, and behold [f] a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat [g] like unto the Son of man, having on his head [h] a golden crown, and in his hand a [i] sharp sickle. 15. And [k] another angel came out of the temple, [l] crying with a loud voice to him that sat on the cloud, [m] Thrust in thy sickle, and reap: for the time is come for thee to reap; for the harvest of the earth is ‡ ripe. 16. Verses 13—20. For the farther encouragement of the church we have here,

1. A voice from heaven, declaring the blessedness of all who die in the faith and favour of Jesus, whether martyrs or others; their sufferings are all ended, they enter upon the beginnings of their eternal rest, and their works shall follow them, to bear witness to their fidelity. Lord Jesus, may this blessedness be mine!

2. A new vision succeeds under the figure of the harvest and vintage. The Lord Jesus appears seated on a cloud, with a golden crown, and sharp sickle in his hands; and an angel, the representative of the ministers of Jesus, cried to him in prayer out of the temple, that he would put in his sickle, and execute vengeance on the wicked, whose provocations made them ripe for judgment: in answer to their cry, the sickle is thrust into the earth. A second angel with another sharp sickle appears, and a third from out of the temple cries to him to put in his sickle, and gather the grapes of the earth into the wine-press of the wrath of God; and the blood came out of the wine-press up to the horses' bridles, for the space of one thousand and six hundred furlongs. These judgments, if considered as the same, may refer either to the great destruction which shall be made of the enemies of Christ's church, in the day when the Papal tyranny shall be destroyed, and the most dreadful slaughter be made of all the adherents of the beast: or it may refer to the final day of judgment, as others suppose, and perdition of ungodly men. But if the events alluded to are supposed to be different, then the first may be applied to the destruction of the kingdom of the beast and his subjects, and the last to the general judgment. Whichever it be, it is the comfort of the faithful, that however many or inveterate their enemies may be, they shall inevitably be rooted out at the last, and perish for ever.

Verses 1—4. The former chapters gave a general view of the judgments which were ready to fall on the Antichristian foe, and we have here preparation made for the execution of them.

1. Seven angels, the ministers of wrath, appear with the seven last plagues, ready to execute them on the enemies of the church.

2. The church triumphant in heaven is seen standing on a sea of glass mingled with fire, the emblem of their multitude, spotless purity, and tried integrity; and in the view of their deliverance from all their persecuting foes, and the judgments God was about to inflict upon them, they sung aloud his praises, as Israel of old, when, having passed through the Red sea, they beheld the carcasses of the Egyptians on the shore. They ascribe glory to God for his providential works, acknowledge the truth and justice of all his ways; and that he is most worthy to be feared and adored, who in his judgments manifests his love to his people, and his wrath against their enemies.

5. And after that I looked, and, behold, [q] the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened: 6. And [r] the seven angels came out of the temple, having the seven plagues, [s] clothed in pure and white linen, and having their breasts girded with golden girdles. 7. And [t] one of the four beasts gave unto the seven angels seven golden [u] vials, full of the wrath of God, who [x] liveth for ever and ever. 8. And the temple [y] was filled with smoke from the glory of God, and from his power; and [z] no man was [a] able to enter into the temple, till the seven plagues of the seven angels were fulfilled.

Verses 5—8. A further vision presents itself to the enraptured apostle.

1. The temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened; the holiest place of all, alluding to the temple on mount Zion, was laid open, and from thence came forth the seven angels with the seven last plagues, clothed in fine linen, and girded with golden girdles, bringing the answer of the prayers which God's suffering saints had put up before the mercy-seat.

2. One of the beasts puts into their hands seven vials full of the wrath of the ever-living God which they are sent forth to pour on the earth. And hereupon the temple was filled with smoke, the emblem of these judgments, from the glory of God, so that no man was able to enter into the temple, till the seven plagues of the seven angels were fulfilled, nor were they by any means to be averted.

CHAP. XVI.—ANNO DOMINI, 96.

In this chapter we have an account of the pouring forth of these vials that were filled with the wrath of God, and they were poured out upon the whole Antichristian empire, and on every thing appertaining to it; 1. upon the earth, ver. 2. then, 2. Upon the sea, ver. 3. 3. Upon the rivers and fountains of waters, ver. 4. Upon which the heavenly hosts proclaim and applaud the righteousness of the judgments of God. 4. The fourth vial was poured out on the sun, ver. 8. the fifth on the seat of the beast; the sixth on the river Euphrates; the seventh in the air, upon which the cities of the nations fell, and great Babylon came in remembrance before God.

1. AND I heard [a] a great voice out of the temple saying to the [b] seven angels, [b] Go your ways, and pour out the vials of the wrath of God upon the earth. 2. And the first went, and poured out his vial [d] upon the earth; [e] and there fell a noisome and grievous sore upon the men [f] which had the mark of the beast, and upon them which worshipped his image. 3. [g] And the second angel poured out his vial upon the sea; and it became as the blood of a dead man: and every living soul died in the sea. 4. [h] And a third angel poured out his vial upon the rivers and fountains of waters; and they became blood. 5. And I heard the [i] angel of the waters say, [k] Thou art righteous, O Lord, [l] which art, and wast, and shalt be, because thou hast judged thus. 6. [m] For they have shed the blood of saints and prophets, and thou hast given them blood to drink; for they are worthy. 7. And I heard [n] another out of the altar say, Even so, Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are thy judgments.

Verses 1—7. Whether these vials have already begun to be poured forth, or whether all of them are to be referred to some future day of vengeance on the Antichristian beast is a matter of dispute. I am most inclined to the latter opinion, and that the events can only show the meaning of the judgments; but I shall give the sentiments of those who suppose them already begun.

1. The first vial which brings a noisome and grievous sore upon the men who worshipped the beast, is supposed to refer to the great corruptions of worship and manners, and the wars which arose among the popish princes, after the death of Louis, surnamed the Pious, between the years 830 and 988.

2. The second vial was poured upon the sea, and it became congealed as the blood of a dead man, and every living creature died; alluding, as is suggested, to the wars which were set on foot for the recovery of the Holy Land from the Saracens, wherein such innumerable multitudes of Papists lost their lives, between 1040 and 1190.

3. The third vial is poured on the rivers and turns them into blood; and is referred to the civil wars of Italy between the Guelphs and Gibellines, the popes, and the emperors, carried on with vast effusion of blood, from the year 1200 to about 1370.

For these judgments, the angel who last poured out his vial upon the waters, ascribes glory to God, acknowledging the righteousness of his punishments, in giving those in return blood to drink, who had shed so profusely the blood of saints; to which another angel from under the altar said, Amen; concurring in the solemn ascription of praise to God for these his righteous judgments. Note, God will make every creature subservient to his glory: even the damnation of the wicked shall redound to the praise of his justice and holiness; and saints and angels shall adore him for his awful judgments, as well as for his mercies.

8. [o] And the fourth angel poured out his vial upon the sun; and power was given unto him to scorch men with fire. 9. And men were * scorched with great heat, [p] and blasphemed the name of God, which hath power over these plagues: and [q] they repented not to give him glory. 10. And the fifth angel poured out his vial upon [r] the seat of the beast: and his kingdom was [s] full of darkness; and they gnawed their tongues for pain, 11. And blasphemed the God of heaven, because of their pains and their sores, [t] and repented not of their deeds. 12. And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the [u] great river Euphrates; [x] and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared. 13. And I saw three [y] unclean spirits like frogs come out of the [z] mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. 14. [a] For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, [b] to gather them to the battle of the great day of God Almighty. 15. [c] Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame. 16. And [d] he gathered them together into a place, called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon.

Verses 8—16. We have here,

1. The fourth vial poured out upon the sun; and this may refer to the terrible calamities which happened between 1378 and 1530, through the contentions about the Papal chair, several Popes at a time claiming it, and excommunicating each other; and through their intrigues and ambition horrid ravages and furious wars raged. Yet, far from being affected with these providences, the adherents to Popery repented not, but blasphemed God the more, and set themselves more fiercely to persecute those whom he raised up, burning those faithful witnesses, Jerome and Huss, who testified against their abominations.

2. The fifth vial was poured on the seat of the beast, and darkness followed in his kingdom, and his subjects gnawed their tongues for pain: where, as in the foregoing vials, there is a manifest allusion to the plagues of Egypt. And this is interpreted of the stroke given to the Pope's dominion by the Reformation, between 1530 and 1650, which excited the blasphemies of the antichristian powers; and far from bringing them to repentance, though it cut them to the heart with vexation, excited their bitter imprecations upon the reformed as heretics and apostates, on whom they denounced the heaviest vengeance.

3. The sixth seal is poured upon the river Euphrates, and supposed to imply the destruction of the Ottoman empire, in order to open a way for the conversion of the eastern nations to Christianity, the river being dried up, to prepare a passage for the kings of the East to come into the church.

Hereupon the devil, perceiving his kingdom every where shaken, rallies all his forces, and by his emissaries, the ecclesiastics of Rome, represented by unclean spirits like frogs, sends forth to gather the kings of the antichristian party to his banners, and by lying wonders and false miracles engages them, in support of the Papal cause, to assemble for war against the saints in a place called Armageddon, which should be as fatal to the enemies of the church as Megiddo, where the army of Sisera fell before the sword of Barak.

A warning is added, ver. 15. addressed to the faithful in the view of this day. Behold, I come as a thief, suddenly and unexpectedly, when these enemies apprehend themselves most secure. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame. Note, The uncertainty of the coming of our Lord should engage us to maintain constant watchfulness, that we may not be surprised, but ready with joy to welcome his arrival.

17. And the seventh angel poured out his vial [e] into the air; and [f] there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, [g] It is done. 18. [h] And there were voices, and thunders, and lightnings; and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great. 19. And [i] the great city was divided into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell: and great Babylon came in remembrance before God, [k] to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath. 20. [l] And every island fled away, and the mountains were not found. 21. [m] And there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven, every stone about the weight of a talent; [n] and men blasphemed God because of the plague of the hail; for the plague thereof was exceeding great.

Verses 17—21. The seventh and last vial is poured into the air, the place where Satan's illusions are practised. And now a voice from heaven exulting cries, It is done; the ruin of antichrist is completed. Tremendous voices, thunders, and lightnings followed; and such an earthquake as had never been before, denoting the entire dissolution of this persecuting state. Rome itself the seat of the Papal empire is shattered in pieces; and all the other cities of the antichristian empire sunk into ruins. The time is now come for mystical Babylon's overthrow, and God's fearful vengeance is poured out upon her. The whole body of her adherents, whether dwelling in islands or mountains, shall utterly be destroyed, as if swallowed up by an earthquake. And, as one means of completing their ruin, they who attempt to flee for their lives, shall, like the Amorites, (Josh. x. 11.) be consumed with hailstones, each vast as a talent, and die impenitent under all their judgments, still blaspheming the hand that lies so heavy upon them. Note, The sorest judgment is a hard and impenitent heart: where that abides, there all God's visitations tend but to exasperate and provoke deeper blasphemies.

CHAP. XVII.—ANNO DOMINI, 96.

This chapter gives another representation of those things that had been revealed before, concerning the wickedness and ruin of antichrist. This antichrist had been before represented as a beast, and is now described as a great whore. And here, 1. The apostle is invited to see this vile woman, ver. 1, 2. 2. He tells us what appearance she made, ver. 3—6. 3. The mystery of it is explained to him, ver. 7—12. And, 4. Her ruin foretold, ver. 13, &c.

1. AND there came [a] one of the seven angels, which had the seven vials, and [b] talked with me, saying unto me, Come hither; I will shew unto thee [c] the judgment of the [d] great whore that sitteth upon many waters: 2. [e] With whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication. 3. [f] So he carried me away in the spirit into [g] the wilderness: and I saw [h] a woman sit upon a scarlet coloured beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns. 4. [i] And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet colour, and * decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, [k] having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication: 5. And [l] upon her forehead was a name written, [m] MYSTERY, [n] BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF † HARLOTS AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH. 6. And I saw the woman [o] drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus: and when I saw her, [p] I wondered with great admiration. 7. And the angel said unto me, [q] Wherefore didst thou marvel? [r] I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carrieth her, which hath the seven heads and ten horns. 8. [s] The beast that thou sawest was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and [t] go into perdition: and [u] they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not [x] written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold [y] the beast that was, and is not, and yet is. 9. And [z] here is the mind which hath wisdom. [a] The seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth. 10. And there are seven kings: five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space. 11. [b] And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition. 12. And the [c] ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast. 13. [d] These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the beast.

Verses 1—13. An angel farther explains to the apostle what was meant by the vision before him; who this great whore was on whom God's judgments were to be executed; whilst proudly seated upon the waters, the emblem of her vast jurisdiction, and having made the kings and the inhabitants of the earth drunk with her idolatries and sorceries, she flattered herself she should sit as a queen, and see no sorrow.

Instantly in a vision John was carried into the wilderness, and there he beheld the antichristian whore seated upon a scarlet-coloured beast, the Papacy, scarlet being the colour in which the Pope and cardinals are dressed; or to denote the sanguinary edicts executed by her. This beast was full of names of blasphemy, the blasphemous titles and prerogatives of infallibility, supremacy, &c. being challenged by the Popes of Rome, which is seated on seven hills, signified by the seven heads, and usurped authority over many potent kingdoms. This woman appeared in all the attire of a harlot, intimating the vast pomp and profusion of rich clothes and ornaments used by the Romish church, to deck their priests, idols, and images. In her hand was a cup of philters, to intoxicate her paramours, and lead them to all her abominable wickednesses in doctrine, worship, and manners; and upon her forehead her name was written, Mystery, (2 Thes. ii. 7.) with deep design and craft carrying on her iniquitous designs; Babylon the great, like Babylon of old, for oppression, pride, and idolatry; the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth; the parent and patroness of every wickedness; and she was drunk with the blood of martyrs. A character so horrid, infamous, and hideous, greatly excited John's astonishment.

Observing his amazement, the angel explains the vision. This beast was of old, when Rome was the seat of Pagan idolatry and persecution; and is not, Rome Pagan having been destroyed; and yet is, the same under the Papal government in tyranny and idolatry as formerly; it is the offspring of hell, and is doomed to return thither. The men of the Roman empire in general, God's elect excepted, shall wonder after this beast with superstitious veneration. And here is the mind which hath wisdom; let such a one who is intelligent mark these characters, and they will be led to what is prefigured by them. (1.) The seven hills are seven mountains on which the woman sitteth; Rome, the capital of her empire, being built on seven hills. (2.) There are seven kings, or successive forms of government; five are fallen, the kings, consuls, dictators, decemvirs, and military tribunes, no longer subsist. One is; the Pagan emperors that then reigned when the vision was given: and one is not yet come; the Christian emperors, which are to endure but a short space. The beast is the eighth, in order; or if the empire, as under the Pagan and Christian emperors, be considered as one form of government, the Papacy is one of the seven kings, and will be as surely destroyed as the former. (3.) Another mark of this beast is the ten horns, which are so many kings, which had not yet received their kingdoms, but were to arise about the same time when the Papal power should grow to its height; even when the empire was divided into about that number of kingdoms, and all their princes submitted to the Papal yoke, and consented to uphold the authority of the Roman pontiffs.

14. [e] These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them: [f] for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings: and [g] they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful. 15. And he saith unto me, [h] The waters which thou sawest, where the whore sitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues. 16. And the [i] ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these [k] shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire. 17. For [l] God hath put in their hearts to fulfil his will, and to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled. 18. And the woman which thou sawest [m] is that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth.

Verses 14—18. The rise of the Papal power had been shown: here we have its downfall.

1. These kings will make war with the Lamb, endeavouring, by fire and sword, to compel his people to submit with implicit obedience to the Papal see: but he shall strengthen them with constancy to resist, and even in martyrdom to conquer; for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings: mighty to support his suffering saints, who being chosen by his grace, and called by his word, are enabled to approve themselves faithful in defiance of all opposition.

2. The same kingdoms that have exerted their power to support the throne of the beast, shall, through God's overruling providence, be made the means of his destruction. Though God for a while suffers them to give their kingdoms to the beast, yet, when the time appointed is accomplished, their successors in these kingdoms shall be as much turned to hate and destroy the whore, whose dominion for a while shall extend over the nations and kings of the earth, as their predecessors were zealous to maintain the Papal usurpations; they shall treat her with every indignity, and destroy her by the most tormenting death. Whence we may observe, (1.) That there never will be another universal monarchy erected by any of the states of Christendom. (2.) That the very powers that have been the pillars of Popery, shall be the chief instruments in pulling down the Papal throne.

* Or power.

1. AND after [a] these things I saw [b] another angel come down from heaven, having great power; [c] and the earth was lightened with his glory. 2. And he cried mightily with a strong voice, saying, [d] Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird. 3. [e] For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, and the kings of the earth have committed fornication with her, [f] and the merchants of the earth are waxed rich through the * abundance of her delicacies.

Verses 1—3. Descending from heaven with brightness like the sun, an angel; invested with great power, cries, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen; her long expected doom is come; and as she hath been filled with abominations, her deserted palaces and ruined habitations shall become the den of dragons, the hold of every foul spirit, and the cage of every unclean and hateful bird: and the cause of her ruin is ascribed to her idolatries, adulteries, and the merchandise of souls, which enabled her and her ecclesiastics to riot in wealth and luxury.

4. And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, [g] Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues: 5. For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities. 6. [h] Reward her even as she rewarded you, and double unto her double, according to her works: in the cup which she hath filled fill to her double. 7. [k] Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire: [l] for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her. 9. And [m] the kings of the earth, who have committed fornication and lived deliciously with her, [n] shall bewail her, and lament for her, when they shall see the [o] smoke of her burning, 10. [p] Standing afar off for the fear of her torment, saying, Alas, alas! that great city Babylon, that mighty city! for [q] in one hour is thy judgment come. 11. [r] And the merchants of the earth shall weep and mourn over her; for no man buyeth their merchandise any more: 12. And saying, [z] Alas, alas! that great city, that was clothed in fine linen, and purple, and scarlet, and decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls! 17. For [a] in one hour so great riches is come to nought. [b] And every shipmaster, and all the company in ships, and sailors, and as many as trade by sea, stood afar off, 18. And cried when they [c] saw the smoke of her burning, saying [d] What city is like unto this great city! 19. [e] And they cast dust on their heads, and cried, weeping and wailing, saying, Alas, alas! that great city, [f] wherein were made rich all that had ships in the sea by reason of her costliness! [g] for in one hour is she made desolate. 20. [h] Rejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye holy apostles and prophets; for God hath avenged you on her. 21. Verses 4—24. We have here,

1. Warning given to the people of God to separate themselves from Babylon mystical, and because of her enormous provocations against God, to retaliate upon her righteous vengeance. She proudly vaunted her imperial state, and boasted of her security: but sudden destruction shall overtake her; and, hurled from the summit of grandeur, death, mourning, and famine shall seize her, and by the judgment of the Almighty Lord she shall be utterly burned with fire. Note, (1.) They who would be saved from the ruin of the wicked, must separate themselves from their society. (2.) God will give righteous judgment to the sinner, and repay him according to the multitude of his ungodlinesses.

2. A doleful lamentation is taken up for her fall by the kings and merchants of the earth, and sailors, the cardinals, priests, monks, Jesuits, and other ecclesiastics, who trafficked in dispensations, indulgences, &c. making merchandise of the souls of men. Standing afar off, and beholding the smoke of her burning, they will bewail her sudden and irrecoverable ruin, and therewith the loss of all her grandeur, wealth, and luxury, in which they had long indulged themselves: a sorrow of the world which worketh death, and but aggravates the miseries complained of.

3. The saints of God, with the apostles and prophets, are called to triumph over her, and to rejoice in her fall: for when the wicked fall there is a shouting; not from a spirit of private revenge, but from a delight to behold God glorified in his righteous judgments.

4. To give a sign of Babylon's irrecoverable ruin, a mighty angel hurls a millstone into the sea, intimating, that all joy should for ever cease, every kind of traffic be at an end, the necessaries of life fail, no light appear, no bridal song any more be heard, but solitude and silence reign in her desolate palaces; because by her sorceries and idolatries she had bewitched the earth, and at her hands was required the blood of all the martyrs which had been slain on the earth by her cruel edicts and persecutions. Note, The sinner who sinks down into the abyss of hell under the wrath of God, is lost for ever, and shall never rise up again.

Verses 1—4. A command being given in ver. 20. of the former chapter, to the saints of God to rejoice over Babylon fallen, we have here their song of praise on that occasion. They cried, Alleluia, ascribing salvation, and glory, and honour, and power, to the Lord their God; acknowledging his righteous judgments in the vengeance executed on the great whore, for her lewdness, idolatry, and cruelty; and they repeated loud Alleluias, whilst the smoke of her torment arose up for ever and ever. The four living creatures, and the elders, the representatives of the ministers and the church of the redeemed, hereupon joined in their adorations before the throne, and joyfully cried, Amen! Alleluia! Note, Even the torment of the damned will afford matter of praise to God's saints, and glory to himself.

5. [i] And a voice came out of the throne, saying, Praise our God, all ye his servants, and ye that fear him, both small and great. 6. [k] And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia: for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. 7. [l] Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honour to him; [m] for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. 8. And to her was granted [n] that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints. 9. And he saith unto me, Write, [o] Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb. And he saith unto me, [p] These are the true sayings of God. 10. [q] And I fell at his feet to worship him. And he said unto me, See thou do it not: [r] I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus: worship God:

for the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.

Verses 5—10. The song of triumph over Babylon being ended, a voice from the throne enjoins the host of the redeemed to unite in the praises of their common Lord, and instantly innumerable voices, loud as cataracts of water, or mighty thunders, poured forth their Halleluias: For the Lord God omnipotent reigneth; since the Antichristian powers are broken, his kingdom of grace is extended through the earth, and his dominion universal over a willing people. The marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready; therefore, let us be glad, and rejoice, and give honour to him. And this may refer to the conversion of the Jews, who will now be brought into the church, and be publicly in profession joined to the Lord as his people.

1. The dress of the Lamb's wife is described. She is arrayed in fine linen, clean and white; and that is interpreted to signify the righteousness of saints, both imputed and implanted, whereby the church becomes meet for the bosom of her Lord, beautiful in the comeliness he puts upon her.

2. They are declared blessed, who are invited, and come to the marriage-supper of the Lamb; partaking of all the privileges and ordinances of the gospel, thereby admitted to the happiest communion with Jesus, and joined to the Lord in one Spirit.

3. The angel closes with a solemn assurance of the truth of this revelation, which should not fail of its accomplishment; and, overcome with the brightness of his glory, John fell at his feet, and was ready to pay him divine honour, not considering what he did: but the angel rebuked him for his inconsiderate design. He owns himself unworthy of that honour, which was due to God alone; and glorious as he appeared, was but the apostle's fellow-servant, bearing testimony to the same Jesus, and now revealing what the Saviour dictated to him, who inspired the prophets, and sent him to deliver this message to John for the church's use and comfort. Note, The highest created being hath no more title to our worship than the lowest; it is the same idolatry to worship an angel as a worm.

11. And [s] I saw heaven opened, and behold [t] a white horse; and he that sat upon him was called [u] Faithful and True; and [x] in righteousness he doth judge and make war. 12. His eyes were [y] as a flame of fire, and on his head were [z] many crowns; and [a] he had a name written, that no man knew but he himself. 13. [b] And he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood: and his name is called [c] The Word of God. 14. [d] And the armies which were in heaven followed him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean. 15. [e] And out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations: and [f] he shall rule them with a rod of iron: and [g] he treadeth the wine-press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God. 16. [h] And he hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS. 17. And I saw an angel [i] standing in the sun; and he cried with a loud voice, saying to [k] all the fowls that fly in the midst of heaven, Come and gather yourselves together unto the supper of the great God; 18. That ye may eat the flesh of kings, and the flesh of captains, and the flesh of mighty men, and the flesh of horses, and of them that sit on them, and the flesh [l] of all men, both free and bond, both small and great. 19. [m] And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army. 20. And [n] the beast was taken, and with him [o] the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshipped his image. [p] These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone. 21. [q] And the remnant were slain with the sword of him that sat upon the horse, which sword proceeded out of his mouth: and all the fowls were filled with their flesh.

Verses 11—21. The Lord Jesus here appears in majesty to execute vengeance on the beast and his adherents, now assembled to make their last efforts.

1. A most magnificent description is given of the Captain of our salvation. He is seated on a white horse, the emblem of victory; he is called Faithful and True, performing all his promises to his people, and in righteousness executing vengeance on his enemies. His eyes, bright as the flame, pierce into the secrets of the soul; and his many crowns of gold denote his universal dominion; his name and nature, as Jehovah, none can comprehend. His bloody vesture bespeaks his conquest over his slaughtered foes; and one of the names, whereby he hath revealed himself, is the Word of God. Close behind him followed his faithful warriors, his saints arrayed in robes of righteousness and garments of salvation. From his mouth proceeds the sharp sword of his denunciations of vengeance, before which his foes must fall. As a potter's vessel before an iron rod, so shall they be broken to pieces; and as grapes laid in the wine-press, so shall he trample them in his fury. And on his vesture, where it hung down over his thigh, was this illustrious motto wrought, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS!

2. A call is given to all the fowls of the air to assemble on this dread occasion, and feast on the corpses of all the Antichristian host, both great and small, who are now about to perish together.

3. The army of the ungodly, Papist, Pagan, and Mahometan, assembles under the conduct of the beast; the battle is joined, the victory decisive; the beast and false prophet, which wrought the lying wonders, are taken; and the ringleaders in the Antichristian apostasy are cast together, body and soul, into the burning lake; and all their adherents fall by the sword of him that sat on the white horse, and the fowls are gorged with their carcasses. And now, all foes being subdued, the glorious millennium commences, when the kingdoms of the world become the kingdoms of the Lord and of his Christ.

CHAP. XX.—ANNO DOMINI, 96.

This chapter is thought, by some, to be the darkest part of all this prophecy: it is very probable the things contained in it are not yet accomplished; and therefore it is the wiser way to content ourselves with general observations, than to be positive and particular in our explications of it. Here we have an account, 1. Of the binding of Satan for a thousand years, ver. 1—3. 2. The reign of the saints with Christ for the same time, ver. 4—6. 3. Of the loosing of Satan, and the conflict of the church with Gog and Magog, ver. 7—10. 4. Of the day of judgment, ver. 11, &c.

1. AND [a] I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand. 2. And he laid hold [b] on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years, 3. And [c] cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, [d] that he should deceive the nations no more, till [e] the thousand years should be fulfilled: [f] and after that he must be loosed a little season. 4. [g] And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw [h] the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and [i] they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. 5. But [k] the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the [l] first resurrection. 6. [m] Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power; but [n] they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years.

Verses 1—6. The fourth period now commences.

1. Satan, the great deceiver, is bound by the angel of the everlasting covenant, and cast into the bottomless pit, restrained from all exercise of his power, and permitted no more, during a thousand years, to trouble the peaceful and happy state of the church; when they are expired, for a little season he will again be loosed.

2. The reign of the saints with Christ begins, which some interpret, literally, of the resurrection of saints and martyrs, with whom Christ will personally dwell upon earth, during a thousand years before the general resurrection; but I rather concur with those who interpret this of the glorious state of the church during this period, when the faithful, who are one in spirit with all the former martyrs and confessors, who had faithfully opposed the Antichristian tyranny, and now behold judgment executed upon their foes, these and their successors shall reign in a state of great dignity, peace, prosperity, and joy, Satan being no longer able to interrupt their repose; whilst all their former enemies are so entirely subdued, as figuratively to be called dead; and during this period none will be found to interrupt or disturb the felicity of the saints. This happy state may metaphorically be well styled the first resurrection, and is a figure of that which shall follow at the end of time.

3. The happiness of these souls is great. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God, and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years, in body, soul, and spirit devoted to him, and experiencing the felicity of his service here, as the pledge of that eternal glory and blessedness which they expect hereafter.

7. And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison. 8. And shall [o] go out to deceive the nations [p] which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. 9. [q] And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed [r] the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city: and [s] fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them. 10. [t] And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever.

Verses 7—10. The fifth period begins with the loosing of Satan, the thousand years being expired. His going forth once more to deceive; his prevalence over the nations, whom once more he will assemble, even Gog and Magog, the figures of those enemies of the church so named of old, and they shall surround the camp of the saints and the beloved city; but fire from heaven shall consume them, and the devil that deceived them will now be finally shut up in the eternal prison of hell, with the beast and the false prophet, to be tormented for ever and ever. To what event this refers: who are the nations meant by Gog and Magog; or what time this period occupies, is utterly mysterious. Of all these we must be content to be ignorant. The events themselves alone can unfold the prophecy.

11. [u] And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, [x] from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them. 12. [y] And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, [z] which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, [a] according to their works. 13. [b] And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and * hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and [c] they were judged every man according to their works. 14.

Verses 11—15. The sixth period seems evidently to refer to the final judgment, which is here awfully described.

1. The Judge appears on his magnificent throne, and before him the elementary heavens vanish, and the earth flies away.

2. All, both small and great, appear at his tremendous bar; the sea and the grave give up their dead; the books are opened of God's omniscience, where every work and secret thought of men are recorded, and they are judged accordingly; whilst in the book of life of the Lamb their names are found written who shall never enter into condemnation. Note, Before this awful day arrives, we should judge ourselves that we may not then be judged of the Lord, and so continually live under the apprehension and influence of it, that we may then have nothing to fear.

3. The issue of the great assize is, that death and hell, the grave, for ever were abolished; and the wicked who existed in their separate state, now raised to life, even all who are not found written in the book of life, are cast into the lake of fire: this is the second death, inexpressibly more dreadful than the first, for here immortality itself will be a curse, and the torments be intolerable and eternal. Lord, gather not my soul with sinners in that day.

CHAP. XXI.—ANNO DOMINI, 96.

Hitherto the prophecy of this book has presented to us a very remarkable mixture of light and shade, prosperity and adversity, mercy and judgment, in the conduct of Divine Providence towards the church in the world; now, at the close of all, the day breaks, and the shadows flee away; a new world now appears, the former being passed away. Some are willing to understand all that is said in these two last chapters, of the state of the church even here on earth, in the glory of the latter days; but others, more probably, take it as a representation of the perfect and triumphant state of the church in heaven: Let but the faithful saints and servants of God wait a while, and they shall not only see, but enjoy the perfect holiness and happiness of that world. In this chapter you have, 1. An introduction to the vision of the new Jerusalem, ver. 1—9. 2. The vision itself, ver. 10, &c.

1. AND [a] I saw [b] a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more [c] sea. 2. And I John saw [d] the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. 3. And [e] I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold, [f] the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. 4. [g] And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away. 5. And [h] he that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new. And he said unto me, Write; for [i] these words are true and faithful. 6. And he said unto me, [k] It is done. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. [l] I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely. 7. [m] He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I [n] will be his God, and he shall be my son. 8. [o] But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone; which is the second death.

Verses 1—8. The last glorious period now commences of the heavenly felicity of God's saints, if that may be so called, which, though it hath a beginning, never will have an end.

The blessedness of the heavenly state is here described under the most august representations.

1. A new heaven and earth rises, where there is no sea, all storms, calamities, and troubles being at an end, and an eternal rest remaining for the people of God.

2. A glorious city appears in view, such as earth never beheld, the new Jerusalem, whose maker and builder is God, beautiful as a bride adorned to meet the bridegroom, the emblem of the church of the redeemed, who will then be perfect in holiness and happiness for ever.

3. The unutterable felicity of God's saints is described by a voice from heaven declaring, (1.) The residence of God in the midst of his people, admitting them into the nearest relation with his blessed self, taking them for his own, and offering himself as their eternal portion. (2.) He will for ever banish sin, sorrow, and death from the celestial mansions: the former imperfect state is passed away, and that of perfect happiness is come.

4. The certainty of this bliss and blessedness is confirmed by the word of him that sitteth on the throne. Behold, I make all things new. And again he said, Write, for these words are true and faithful. And he added, It is done, the work of redemption is completely finished. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, who will assuredly accomplish what I have begun. I will give unto him that is athirst for spiritual blessings in heavenly things, to drink of the fountain of the water of life freely, admitting him, of my sovereign grace and favour, to all the unutterable delights of never ending consolations in my immediate presence and glory. He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son, entitled to all the dignity and honour of that transcendently glorious relation.

5. The dreadful ruin of the wicked shall be as sure as the happiness of the saints; they are described as fearful, ashamed of the cross of Christ, and dreading the sufferings of his service; unbelieving, distrustful of his promises, and rejecting his word; abominable, the slaves of corrupt affections; murderers, whoremongers, sorcerers, idolaters, and all liars, these are doomed to suffer endless torment in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death. Wo to those on whom these sins are found; they assuredly are brands for the burning.

9. [p] And there came unto me one of the seven angels which had the seven vials full of the seven last plagues, and talked with me, saying, [q] Come hither, I will shew thee the bride, the Lamb's wife. 10. [r] And he carried me away in the spirit to a great and high mountain, and shewed me [s] that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God, 11. [t] Having the glory of God: and her light was like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal; 12. And had [u] a wall great and high, and [x] had twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels, and [y] names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel. 13. On the east three gates; on the north three gates; on the south three gates; and on the west three gates. 14. And the wall of the city had [z] twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb. 15. And he that talked with me had [a] a golden reed to measure the city, and the gates thereof, and the wall thereof. 16. And the city lieth [b] four-square, and the length is as large as the breadth: and he measured the city with the reed, twelve thousand furlongs. The length and the breadth and the height of it are equal. 17. And he measured the wall thereof, an hundred and forty and four cubits, according to the measure of a man, that is, [c] of the angel. 18. [d] And the building of the wall of it was of jasper: and the city was pure gold, like unto clear glass. 19. [e] And the foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones. The first foundation was jasper; the second, sapphire; the third, a chalcedony; the fourth, an emerald; 20. The fifth, sardonyx; the sixth, sardius; the seventh, chrysolite; the eighth, beryl; the ninth, a topaz; the tenth, a chrysoprasus; the eleventh, a jacinth; the twelfth, an amethyst. 21. And the twelve gates were twelve [f] pearls; every several gate was of one pearl: and the [g] street of the city was pure gold, as it were transparent glass.

Verses 9—21. One of those ministering spirits who had lately been employed in pouring out the vials of wrath, leads the enraptured John to a nearer view from a neighbouring mountain, of the glorious city, the emblem of the church, the Lamb's wife, which he saw descending from heaven.

The glory of God, the divine Shechinah, was visible in the midst of her, affording her the brightest light, Jesus the Sun of Righteousness shining upon her; a vast high wall, and angelic guards waiting at her gates, inscribed with the names of the twelve tribes, through which the sealed of the Lord entered into the city, denoted her invincible defence and security. The gates stood three on each side, looking to the four quarters of the heavens, open for the faithful who should come from all lands; the twelve foundations of the walls bore the names of the apostles on whom the church is built, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone; the city, on being measured, appeared foursquare, to signify the perfection, stability, and uniformity of the church above; it was fifteen hundred miles on each side, intimating its vast extent; and the height of the walls proportionable to its length and breadth, even one hundred and forty-four cubits; the building was of jasper, and the city of pure gold like crystal, denoting its magnificence, durability, and glory; and the foundations garnished with every precious stone, brighter than those which glittered in the high priest's breastplate, (Exod. xxviii. 15—21.) and the gates were each of one massy pearl; and the street of the city was of burnished gold, polished like crystal. Every thing excellent and dazzling in the sight of mortals, is here heaped together with amazing profusion, and yet how faintly can all these images convey the delights, blessedness, and perfection of the heavenly state, where such good things are prepared as pass man's understanding!

22. [h] And I saw no temple therein: for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it. 23. [i] And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it; for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof. 24. [k] And the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it: and [l] the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honour into it. 25. [m] And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day: [n] for there shall be no night there. 26. [o] And they shall bring the glory and honour of the nations into it. 27. [p] And there shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's [q] book of life.

q Phil. 4.

Verses 22—27.

1. No temple was found in this celestial city, immediate communion with the eternal God being there enjoyed, which renders all the present ordinances of approach to God needless.

2. No sun or moon were wanted, where the uncreated Light himself abode; the glory of God and the Lamb, one in essential union with the Father and Spirit, is the light thereof.

3. There all the nations, saved through the atoning blood of Jesus, walk in the light of the Lord; and the potentates, who through grace partake of his salvation, bring thither their glory and honour, counting that they reign indeed when made kings and priests unto God in this eternal state of blessedness.

4. The gates stand open continually by day, and there is no night there, nor fear of invading foes: all that hath ever appeared valuable and glorious among the nations here, with infinitely surpassing excellence is found there, and every thing defiling is forbidden admission; no liar, no idolater, especially, can enter there, but only those whose names are written in the book of life of the Lamb. Note, Into the present churches upon earth hypocrites will insinuate themselves, but into heaven nothing unholy or impure can be admitted; all there are perfected in holiness.

CHAP. XXII.—ANNO DOMINI, 96.

In this chapter we have, 1. A farther description of the heavenly state of the church, ver. 1—6. 2. A confirmation of this and all the other visions of this book, ver. 6—20. 3. The conclusion, ver. 20, 21.

1. AND he shewed me [a] a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the [b] throne of God and of the Lamb. 2. In the midst of [c] the street of it, and on either side of the river, [d] was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month: [e] and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations. 3. [f] And there shall be no more curse: [g] but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it; and [h] his servants shall serve him: 4. [i] And they shall see his face; and [k] his name shall be in their foreheads. 5. [l] And there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light: [m] and they shall reign for ever and ever.

Verses 1—5. The angelic guide here further leads the apostle to view some other emblematical glories of this celestial city.

1. A river of water of life, clear as crystal, flowing from the throne of God and of the Lamb, the figure of those eternal consolations, and that vital influence immediately derived from communion with the fountain of eternal bliss.

2. The tree of life, the emblem of Jesus the Lord of life and glory, here spread its branches on both sides the river, or several in a row were planted on the river's bank, yielding perpetual fruit, new every month, and the very leaves are for the healing of the nations; intimating the rich provision of unceasing delights that is here made for the faithful, and their perfect preservation in soul and body from all decay or infirmity.

3. No curse can there enter; the eternal felicity and impeccability of the saints are secured, and before the throne of God and of the Lamb they shall pay their unceasing adorations, enjoy the beatific vision of the God of glory, and bear his bright image on them visible as if his name was engraven on their foreheads.

4. No night is there, nor need they the sun or a candle, where the Lord God is their everlasting Light, and they reign with him for ever and ever. O blessed abode! my soul, aspire after it, and eager press for an entrance into this everlasting kingdom of thy God and Saviour.

6. And he said unto me, [n] These sayings are faithful and true: and the [o] Lord God of the holy prophets sent his angel [p] to shew unto his servants the things which must shortly be done. 7. [q] Behold, I come quickly: [r] blessed is he that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy of this book. 8. And I John [s] saw these things and heard them. And when I had heard and seen, [t] I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which shewed me these things. 9. Then saith he unto me, See thou do it not: for I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book: worship God. 10. And [u] he saith unto me, [x] Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book; for the time is at hand. 11. [y] He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still: [z] and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still. 12. And, behold, [a] I come quickly; and [b] my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be. 13. [c] I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last. 14. [d] Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have [e] right to [f] the tree of life, and may enter in through [g] the gates into the city. 15. [h] For without are dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie. 16. [i] I Jesus have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches. I am [k] the root and the offspring of David, and [l] the bright and morning star. 17. And the [m] Spirit and [a] the bride say, Come. And let [o] him that heareth say, Come. [p] And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely. 18. For [q] I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, [r] If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the [s] plagues that are written in this book: 19. And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, [t] God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from [u] the things which are written in this book.

Verses 6—19. We have here,

1. A solemn ratification given by the angel of the certainty of these events. These sayings are faithful and true, and he was sent expressly from the Lord Jesus to reveal to John the things that would begin shortly to be accomplished, and continue fulfilling until the end of time.

2. The Lord Jesus himself speaks. Behold, I come quickly; prepare to meet me; the whole period of time is comparatively short and momentary: blessed is he that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy of this book, faithfully adheres to the gospel word, and confidently expects the fulfilment of the promises.

3. Overcome with what he heard and saw, and scarce himself, through rapture, he fell before the angel, and is ready to adore him, but again is reproved and prevented; God is the only worthy object of adoration; angels are but our fellow-servants.

4. The Lord again addresses him, and bids him not seal up the prophecies of this book, but deliver them to the church, the time for their fulfilment now approaching, and when they are accomplished, men's everlasting state will be fixed unchangeably. He that in the great day is found filthy and unjust, must remain so for ever under the wrath of God; and he that is found righteous in the Lord, and made holy by his Spirit, shall be eternally blessed.

5. He repeats his assurance for the comfort of his people. Behold I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be, whether good or bad. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last, unchangeable in love to my people, eternally the same in faithfulness, grace, and power, to protect and preserve them for ever. And it will shortly appear how blessed are they that do his commandments, and approve their fidelity to God, that they may have right, through the promise, to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city, partaking of all the inconceivable blessedness prepared for the faithful: whilst those who shall be found disobedient, unholy, and profane, shall be eternally excluded from these bright mansions. For without are dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth or maketh a lie; whoever lives and dies under the guilt of any of these things perishes irrecoverably.

6. The Lord Jesus confirms to him what the angel had told him. I Jesus, your Lord and Master, have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in, or concerning the churches, and their future state and condition. I am the root and offspring of David; as God, his root; as man, his offspring; and the bright and morning star, leading my people in paths of everlasting peace.

7. The Spirit and the bride say, Come, welcoming the Saviour and waiting the fulfilment of his promise. And let him that heareth, even every faithful soul, take up the word and say, Come. And let him that is athirst for spiritual blessings, come; and whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely: and out of these wells of salvation, the Scriptures, draw the living streams of grace, and consolation. For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, if any man shall add unto these things, now the canon of revelation is complete, by new pretended visions, or wilful perversion of their meaning, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book: and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book. An awful sanction, which guards the sacred records, and binds the heaviest vengeance upon those who dare, by base adulterations, to add thereto, or to diminish therefrom.

20. [x] He which testifieth these things saith, [y] Surely I come quickly; [z] Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus. 21. [a] The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

Verses 20, 21. The Lord Jesus closes his Revelation,

1. With a solemn confirmation of the whole. He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly, certainly and speedily, for the comfort and salvation of my people.

2. The apostle, in the name of all the faithful, professes his confidence in the promise, Amen! Lord, I believe, fulfil it in due season. Even so be it, come, Lord Jesus, and bring our complete and final salvation.

3. He concludes with his benediction. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all! May you experience the riches of his sovereign favour and love, be strengthened by his Spirit mightily in the inner man, faithfully to stand in every evil day, comfortably and confidently persevering in the truth: may you, when all your conflicts end, enter into that eternal state of rest and blessedness which is here revealed. Amen! Such are my prayers for thee, Reader; may we now, without ceasing, be found uniting our supplications before a throne of grace; and together may we meet around a throne of glory, and spend a happy eternity in the praises of our adored Jesus. Amen!
